INDIA, an extensive region of Asia between 10° 4' and 36° N., lon 6, 41 and 90° 30' E. Bounded N by the Himalian mts., dividing it from Tibet, W by the Sulman range, separating it from Beloochistan, E. by parallel offshoots from the opposite extremity of the Himalaya, on the other sides by the Indian Ocean. Area more than 25 times that of England. For administrative and political purposes, the British possessions are distributed, as follows—

Districts.	Area in sq m.	Pop.
Bengal Presidency (including London, Calcutta, Farak, and Jessore)	488,014	54,100,000
Madras Presidency (including Pondicherry)	1,000,000	51,600,000
North West Provinces	1,000,000	51,600,000
Central Provinces	1,000,000	51,600,000
United Provinces	1,000,000	51,600,000
North India (including Delhi)	1,000,000	51,600,000
South India (including Madras)	1,000,000	51,600,000
Total	1,465,282	179,473,500

The principal native states are Oude, Hyderabad, Nagpore, Guzerat, Gwalior, Indore, Mysore, Travancore, Cochin and Cutch, N. Paul, Burmah, Bhopal, Cashmere, and the Rypoote States, with an aggregate area of 789,462 sq m., and a pop. of 54,645,791. Overn out of these states the British have control, they having relinquished the right of self defence, the British guaranteeing external protection and internal tranquillity. Some of these states are required to provide a native force, placed at the disposal of the British, to resist the common enemy. The total armed force of India is as follows—British of all arms 249,529; native states ditto 30,918, medical officers and contingent troops commanded by British officers 41,010. The temperate of the country is various. In the S and middle regions the heat is great; in the N the elevated tracts of the Himalaya have a temperate climate. The monsoons prevailing on both sides of the peninsula bring periodic rains. The year has three seasons, hot, rainy, and temperate: the hot season beginning in March, and lasting till the beginning of June, the rainy season, with occasional intermissions, from June till October, and the temperate season continues from October until the end of February. Between 1800 and 1842, 162 earthquakes were felt in India. In 1843, 23 occurred, and since that time 4 or 5 have taken place in each year. On 26th May 1848, 24th January, and 31st March 1852, the shocks were severe. In Central Himalaya 50 occurred, Lateral Himalaya, including Cabool, Jellalabad, Cashmere, and Assam, 53. Between January 1839 and October 1842, 13 shocks were felt in Assam alone. About two-thirds of the shocks were felt between May and October. By these earthquakes several tracts of country were elevated, others sunk, and in some parts marshes formed, besides causing great loss of human life. The river systems of the country are—1 the Indus and its tributaries, the Sutlej, Beas, Ravee, Chonab, and Jhelum, 2 the Ganges and tributaries, the Jumna, Gogra, Gunduck, and Cozy 3 the Brahmapootra, with its tributaries, the Sampoo, and the Teesta; 4 the Irawaddy, besides the Godavery, Kistnah, Cauvery, Nerbudda, Taptee, Mahanaddee, and various others. The Vindhya mountain range crosses the country from east to west, joining at either extremes the Eastern and Western Ghauts. The country yields splendid timber, other products comprise rice, wheat, barley, cotton, sugar-cane, indigo, tobacco, opium, ginger, and other spices, and tea in Assam, etc. Minerals comprise iron, tin, copper, gold, diamonds, and coal, which is extensively distributed. Revenues of India (1852) 26,092,714, more than one-half of which is derived from the land, the other sources being customs, excise, salt, stamps, and opium. Expenditure in the same year 25,761,433. Excess of income over expenditure 331,281. In the different presidencies the government land tenures vary. In the lower provinces of Bengal the land is held chiefly upon the amildar tenure. In this case no separation of interests is recognized by the government, the whole estate being cultivated for the mutual benefit of the proprietors, and the surplus is divided amongst the shareholders after payment of the government claims. One person is held responsible to the government for the present, and if he fails, the whole estate is sold for payment. The tenure this sort is held in perpetuity, so that no increase of rent can take place. In the N W provinces the land is held under the puttee-darree tenure, by which the estate is parcelled out into allotments, each farmer cultivating his own part, and paying to the overseer of the village his share of the dues, but the whole is jointly responsible for all government claims, the transmission, in the first place, being deprived of his possession. By this system government claims are calculated upon the basis of two-thirds of the net rent, and leases are granted for a period of thirty years. In Bombay and part of Madras, the ryotwar system is the basis of the revenue settlement, each proprietor being held responsible for his own payments, the leases are held for thirty years, and the rents at a specified sum, the proprietor having the option of resigning his lease, or any portion of it, at the end of any season, but it is binding on government for the full term. In the southern districts the seasons are precarious, and the cultivators poor and improvident. Government claims are levied in these parts by taking a large sum in prosperous, and making great deductions in bad seasons; but this does not work well, as it makes farming a gambling transaction. Restrictions, which hindered commerce, and retarded the development of the resources of the country, have been gradually removed within the last twenty years, and India now enjoys free trade, the dues on British and foreign shipping are the same. The inland duties, and duties on goods carried coastwise, are abolished. The following table shows the increase of exports and imports:—

Exports.		Imports.
1834-35.	6,154,129 l .	1834-35.	8,186,160 l .
1849-50.	13,696,696 l .	1849-50.	18,283,543 l .

In 1849-50, 185,685,230 lbs. of cotton were exported, and 1,744,463 quarters Indian corn, were exported to Great Britain. In this extensive country a great diversity of language prevails. In Upper and Southern India the numerous and various dialects are derivatives from the Sanscrit. Hindu is the language of the Mohammedans. Persian was formerly the language of the law courts, but was abolished in 1837, and the vernacular of each district substituted. Brahminism prevails over the whole peninsula, mixed with other forms of Paganism and Mohammedanism. In the Punjab, which was subjected to British rule in 1849, the inhabitants, amounting to 4,740,000, are Hindoos, and bear an implacable hatred to the Mohammedans. The greater portion of the people of Cashmere are Mohammedans. The aboriginal races of India have no literature, and almost no traditions. The Konds in Orissa occupy 62,396 square miles, and the pop. is estimated at 4,634,811. Human sacrifices prevail amongst them, but the British government are using their influence to stop the revolting custom. On the Eastern Ghats and in Mysore are the Cheneviers, a race still more barbarous. Near Madras the Yenedys are so illiterate as to be unable to reckon higher than five. The Bhils, in the hill country bordering Mewar, are robbers and outcasts, and have scarce any faith or form of worship. The Warlis and Katodars occupy the entire mountain range of Western India. The former worship the "Lord of Tigers," to whom they sacrifice fowls and goats; they recognize no other god, and have no idea of a future state. The Katodars or Todavars inhabit the Neilgherries; they live on the outskirts of towns and villages, feeding on snakes, rats, and offal. Nearly allied to these are the Buddhaghars, and the robber tribe of the Phansingars. All the aborigines live in a state of perpetual servitude, and are known by the general name of Coolies. The predecessors of the Brahmins came from the west of the Indus, s.c. 1100. The Hindoos brought with them into India a language closely connected with those of Europe, and reduced to serfage all whom they conquered, besides introducing an elaborate code of laws, which have survived nearly 3,000 years, and prevail still. Contemporaneous with Brahminism came the religion of Buddha, the rival, and for long the dominant faith, of which the cave temples in the Deccan indicate the supremacy, and attest the decadence. It seems to have flourished up to the fifth, and to have declined during the eighth, century. The Mohammedan invasion of India began in the eleventh, and was completed in the fifteenth, century; but most of the Mohammedans now in India spring from a Brahminical stock. The Arabs or Kidoos of Central India and the Coocan came in successive hordes from Arabia and Africa. The Parwis or fire-worshippers, were refugees from the religious persecution of Persia. Though small in number, they have earned a distinguished name for public municipance, skill, and success in commerce; and they have led the way in the cause of female education. The Government of India has for some years past been devoting laudable attention to education. In the different establishments of India, maintained at the public expense, in the year 1849-50, there were 23,170 students. In the north-west provinces, in 1850, there were 1,708 students, of whom 62 were Christians, 1,564 Hindoos, and 280 Mohammedans. In the coast provinces there were 6,106 students, of whom 140 were Christians, 4,868 Hindoos, 673 Mohammedans, and 497 of the other secta. In the Government Vernacular Schools, at the end of 1850, there were 2,404 students, whose creeds are not distinguished. At Fort St George, in 1851, there were 180 students; in Bombay, 1850, there were 13,460 pupils, English and vernacular. English is taught in all its schools, and is highly prized by the native youth of India as a mark of education and refinement. In 1852-3, 3,100,210 rupees were expended on native education. In the sixteenth century Roman Catholic missions were introduced by the Portuguese. In the seventeenth century, the Reformed religion was introduced, with little success, by the Dutch. In 1793, the Baptist Missionary Society sent out its first agents, and several other societies rapidly augmented the number of missionaries all over the country. Towards the close of 1850, 22 missionary societies had established 260 stations, employing 403 preachers, and 551 native catechists. They had founded 308 native churches, having a communion roll of 7,466; besides numerous male and female schools, tract societies and printing-presses, and had distributed 130,000 copies of the Scriptures, in thirteen different languages, in 1850. In the same year, the total cost of the missionary operations amounted to 187,000*l*. Several great public works have been undertaken, and many completed, within the last few years. Among these are the Ganges, Jumna, and Doab canals. A railway from Calcutta by Rajmahal and valley of the Ganges to Delhi, to be extended to the N.W. frontier, was in rapid progress, and in many parts near completion, when arrested by the mutiny in 1857. A line is progressing from Bombay, N.E. to join the Ganges line at Mirzapore; whilst other lines are in progress to connect Bombay and Madras, by Poona and Bellary; and the E. and W. part of the peninsula will be joined by a line from Madras to Beypoor, open (1857) to Arore. From the Punjab to Pegu telegraph wires give instant communication between the presidency towns and the civil and military stations of the country. The zoology comprises the elephant, tiger, leopard, panther, wolf, hyena, lion, which is rare, wild buffalo, bear, jackal, deer, and monkeys. Crocodiles, serpents, and other reptiles are numerous. Domestic animals are the horse, camel, buffalo, ox, sheep, goat, and swine. Fish, and birds of every variety of plumage, are abundant.

Alexander the Great invaded and partly subdued the country. About 126 s.c. it was again invaded by the Tartars (Scythians of the Greeks and Sakas of the Hindoos). From the tenth to the twelfth centuries of the Christian era, the Mohammedans overran and conquered considerable portions of India; and subsequently the Mogul empire was established. In 1498 India was first visited by Vasco de Gama, and subsequently the Portuguese and the Dutch established settlements on the peninsula, but the former never acquired more than a petty territory on the W. coast, and the latter a few commercial factories. The French influence in India, at one time considerable, also yielded to the superior enterprise of the British, and finally the French relinquished the field. In 1683 the first English settlement was made by a company of merchants, in a small spot of the Coromandel coast, of 5 sq. m., transferred in 1683 to Madras. A short time previous a settlement had also been obtained at Hoogly, which afterwards became the Calcutta station. In 1687 Bombay was erected into a presidency. In 1773, by an act of the British Legislature, the 3 provinces were placed under the administration of a governor-general, and Calcutta was made the seat of a supreme court of judicature, the presidencies of Madras and Bombay being made subordinate to that of Bengal. Hitherto the affairs of India had been managed by the company, but in 1784 a board of control was appointed by Government, the president of which became secretary of state for India. From the year 1750, when the warfare acquisition of territory commenced under Lord Clive, a succession of conquests, almost forced upon the British contrary to their inclinations, have now placed nearly all India under their sway. The governor-general, assisted by a council of 5 members, has the power of making laws for the whole of British India, subject to the approval of the home government, and he has the sole direction of the army, which is under the control of a commander-in-chief. In May 1857 the Bengal native troops mutinied, took possession of Delhi, proclaimed an emperor, and massacred many Europeans. Nearly the whole of the N.W. provinces, and other parts of the empire, were shortly after in a state of open rebellion.

INDIANA, one of the U. S., North America, in the W. part of the union, between lat. 37° and 42° 45' N., lon. 84° 42' and 87° 49' W., having N. the Lake and State Michigan, W. Illinois, E. Ohio, and S. the Ohio river, separating it from Kentucky. Area 33,809 sq. m. Pop. 938,774. Surface level or undulating. Rivers nearly all tributaries of the Wabash, which forms its W. frontier. Soil on rivers very fertile; in other parts light, and sandy hills in N. Principal products, maize, wheat, oats, potatoes, wool, butter, cheese, and tobacco. In 1843, 920 m. of railways had been completed in this state, within which is more than half of the Wabash and Erie Canal. Minerals are coal, iron, copper, marble, lime, and freestone. Manufactures comprise cottons and yarns, iron works, tanneries, and distilleries. In 1852 there were four colleges in this state, with a total of 421 students, and having large libraries, with theological, law, and medical schools. In 1851 there were 253,318 pupils attending the public schools; the common school fund was $4,664,379 dollars. Indiana has 1,917 churches of all denominations. There are deaf-mutes, blind, and insane asylums. Public rev. (1850) 1,661,883 dollars. Indiana contains 91 cos., and sends 11 representatives to Congress. Principal towns, Indianapolis, the cap., Madison, New Albany, and Terre Haute. Indiana became one of the States of the Union in 1816.—It is co. in centre of Pennsylvania. Area 733 sq. m. Pop. 27,170; and with cap. of same name, 10 miles N.E. Pittsburg. Pop. 1,000.

INDIANAPOLIS, a city of the U. S., North America, cap. state Indiana, on White River, a navigable affluent of the Wabash, crossed by a large bridge, 168 m. W.S.W. Columbus. Pop. 8,060.

INDIAN ARCHIPELAGO, [ASIATIC ARCHIPELAGO.]

INDIAN KEY, an island of the U. S., North America, Florida, off its E. coast, 75 m. S.W. Cape Florida, and resorted to as a watering-place by visitors.—Indian Springs is a watering-place, Georgia, 53 m. W. Milledgeville.

INDIAN OCEAN, Indicus Mare, a vast oceanic basin, separated from the Pacific on the E. by the Asiatic Archipelago and Australia, bounded on S. by a line drawn from the Cape of Good Hope to Bass Strait, divided from the Atlantic by Africa on W., and enclosed by the countries of Asia on the N. It communicates with the China Sea by the Straits of Malacca, Sunda Strait, and the Strait of Flores. Principal inlets, the Bay of Bengal, the Sea of Oman, the Persian Gulf, and the Red Sea. Chief straits, the Channel of Mozambique, and Palk Strait. The most important islands are Madagascar, Mauritius, Bourbon, the Comoro islands, the Seychelles, and Socotra, belonging to Africa; the Laccadives, Maldives, Ceylon, the Andaman and Nicobar islands, to Asia. The principal rivers of the Indian Ocean are, in Asia, the Salween, Irrawadi, Brahmaputra, Ganges, Godavary, Kistna, Nerbudda, Indus, and the Shat-el-Arab, formed by the junction of the Tigris and Euphrates; in Africa, the Zambeze. The chief seaports are Calcutta and Bombay in India, Malacca in the Asiatic Archipelago, Aden, Mokha, and Muscat in Arabia, Zanzibar, etc., in Africa. Steam-packets are established between the principal ports. The monsoons or periodical winds prevail in the N. part of the ocean, blowing from the S.W. between April and Oct., and S.E. from Oct. to April. Tempests are general at the periods of change; and between lat. 5° and 40° S. violent hurricanes occur. [For limits, routes, etc., see Johnston's Physical Atlas.]

INDIAN TERRITORY, a country comprised within the United States, North America, by the government of which it has been set apart as a permanent residence of the Indian Tribes removed from the different States. It is about 450 m. long from N. to S., and 240 m. wide from E. to W. Situated between lat. 33° 30' and 37° N., lon. 94° 30' and 103° W., a large portion of the country is comprised in the Great American Desert, but elsewhere it is fertile, affords excellent pasture, and abounds in game. The entire pop. is estimated at 120,000 Indians.

INDIES (PLANT), a collective name given to the peninsulas of Hither and Further India, and the Asiatic Archipelago. [INDIA.]

INDIES; WEST, [WEST INDIES.]

INDIGIRKA, a river of E. Siberia, gov. Yakutsk, rises in the Yablonoi mountains, and after a N. course of 750 bl., joins the Arctic Ocean, in lat. 71° N., lon. 140° E.

INDIO, a river of the Isthmus of Panama, New Granada, unites with the Pacora to form a large stream, which enters the Pacific, E. Panama.

INDRE-KABA ST., Malaccan, a river of European Turkey, Macedonia, enters the Gulf of Salonica, 18 m. S.W. Salonica. Length 110 miles.

INDIGNITA, a town of European Turkey, Hamid, 33 m. W.N.W. Constantinople.

INDJIK (CAPE), Lepso, the most N. point of Asia Minor, 13 m. N.W. Sinope.

INDO-CHINA, S. Asia. [MALAY PENINSULA.]

INDORE TERRITORY, India, consists of several isolated tracts, some of them lying very remote from each other, and are as follow:—1st, the territory annexed to the town of Indore, between lat. 21° 18' and 23° 5' N., lon. 73° 2' and 76° 16' E.; 2d, the tract of territory annexed to the town of Rampore, N. of Indore, between lat. 24° 3' and 26° 48' N., lon. 75° 6' and 76° 12' E.; 3d, also N. of Indore, includes the town of Mehedpore, lat. 23° 25' N., lon. 75° 42' E.; 4th, W. of Indore, contains the towns of Dhie and Pitand, between

lat. 23° 18' and 25° 1' N., lon. 74° 00' and 74° 51' E.; and the last in lat. 22° 31' N., lon. 76° 26' E. Total area 8,318 sq. m. Pop. estimated at 815,184. The Vindhya mountains traverse Southern Indore, nearly from E. to W.; the highest point is the Jam Ghat, 2,600 feet above the sea. The Nerbudda river traverses it from E. to W. Soil fertile. Chief products, wheat, rice, pulse, sugarcane, cotton, opium, and tobacco. Climate sultry, the thermometer ranging from 60° to 90° in the shade. Revenue in 1848 was estimated at 221,721. Armed force 21,000 men. Chief towns, Indore, Mundlaistr, Rampoor, and Bhanpura. This state is the possession of the Holcar family.

INDORE, a town of India, cap. state of same name, on l. b. of the Kuthi, 377 m. N.E. Bombay. Pop. estim. at 15,000. Here is a British residency.

INDRAGHRI, a navigable river of Sumatra, on its E. coast, in lat. 0° 32' S., lon. 103° E.

INDRAMATO, a cape, river, and town of Java, on its N. coast, 90 m. E. Batavia.

INDRAPURA or INDRAPORA, a point, river, town, state, and volcano of Sumatra, the town near the S.W. coast, 150 m. N.W. Bencoolen. Indrapura point is in lat. 2° 5' S., lon. 105° 27' E., and N. of it is a bay, in which are the Indrapoor islands.

INDRE, a riv. of France, dep. Indre & Indre-et-Loire, joins the Loire, 18 m. W.S.W. Tours, after a N.W. course of 115 m. On it are the towns La Châtre, Châteauroux, Châtillon, and Loches, from which last it is navigable to the Loire, 45 m.

INDRE, a dep. of N.W. France, formed of part of the old prov. Berry, enclosed by the depts. Loire-et-Cher and Indre-et-Loire, Vienne, II. Vienne, Creuse, and Cher. Area 2,749 sq. m. Pop. 271,938. Surface uniformly level. Principal rivers, the Indre and Creuse. More corn and wine are raised than required for home consumption; though much of the soil is barren and swampy. Climate generally mild and temperate. Sheep are numerous, and many oxen and poultry are fattened here. This dep. furnishes the best lithographic stones in France. Iron, iron goods, earthenware, cutlery, woollen and cotton cloths, yarn, leather, tiles, and parchment, are among the chief products, and are exported to double the value of the imports. Indre is divided into the 4 arrond., Châteauroux, Issoudun, La Châtre, and Le Blanc.

INDRE-ET-LOIRE, a dep. in the N.W. of France, formed chiefly of the old prov. of Touraine, comprising a region on both sides of the Loire, enclosed by the depts. Sarthe, Maine-et-Loire, Vienne, Indre, and Loire-et-Cher. Area 2,410 sq. m. Pop. 315,641. Climate mild. Surface level, and near the Loire very fertile; elsewhere poor, and often marshy. The Cher, Indre, and Vienne rivers water its S. portion. Agriculture has latterly improved, and the produce in corn is now more than adequate to home consumption. The quantity of wine is double that annually consumed, and the surplus is mostly sent to Paris and into Belgium. The dep. furnishes excellent lithographic stones, pipe and potters' clay, and contains an immense mound of petrified shells, which are used as manure. Hemp, liquorice, enices, truffles, fruits, etc., are raised in considerable quantities, the produce of the dep. being chiefly agricultural. The culture of silk is increasing, as are the silk, woollen, and leather manufs. of Tours. Other principal manufs. are of files and rasps, iron wares, red lead, and pottery; and near Montbazon is a national gunpowder factory and nitre refinery. The dep. is divided into the 3 arrond. of Tours, the cap., Chinon, and Loches.

INDREY, a small island of France, dep. Loire-Inférieure, formed by the Loire, 8 m. W. Nantes. The French government lately founded an establishment here for building steam-boats.

INDUS (Sanskrit Sindhu, the sea), one of the great rivers of S. Asia, forming the W. boundary of Hindostan, rises in Tibet, on the N. side of Kailas mountain (Himalaya), in lat. 31° 20' N., lon. 81° 15' E., near the sources of the Sutlej. It flows N.W. for about 120 m., where it is joined by the Gartopo. The conjoint stream now breaks through the Himalaya; and thenceforth it has a S.W. course, separating the Punjab dom. from Afghanistan, and traversing Scinde throughout to its mouth in the Indian Ocean, between lat. 28° and 25° N., lon. 67° 30' and 69° E. Total course estimated at 1,800 miles. Its affluents, though not numerous, are important. N. of the Himalaya, it receives the Gartopo, Sindh-kha-bab, Zanakar, and Shy-yok rivers. S. of the mountains, the Cabool river enters it, and in lat. 28° 55' N., lon. 70° 28' E., 470 m. from the ocean, it is joined from the N.E. by the Panjnad, which brings it to the united streams of the Punjab, or "five rivers," the Sutlej (Hemadree), with the Beas (Hyphasis), the Chenab (Acetines), the Ravee (Hydrastes), and the Jihum (Hydrampe). Below this it has no tributary of much size, but repeatedly subdivides, giving off lateral streams, the principal being the Fulafee and Narra branches; and at Trical, lat. 25° 9' N., lon. 68° 11' E., the Delta commences, the chief arms of which are the Buggan, Sata, and Pinaree. The Indus enters the sea by the Putter, Hajmure, Khali-waree, Kahiware, Sir, and Korse mouths.

Its source is supposed to be 18,000 feet above the sea, its bed at Leh 10,000 feet, and at Attock, 940 m. from its mouth, it is 1,000 feet above the ocean level, 800 feet across, 60 feet in depth, and has a current of 6 m. an hour. Below that point it runs with great velocity, mostly between high cliffs, as far as Kala-Bagh, after which its course is through a level country, with a breadth usually varying from ½ m. to upwards of 1 m., and an average velocity of from 2 to 3 m. an hour. During the season when it is low-t, tides are perceptible upward to about 25 m. below Tattah, or 75 m. from the ocean. Mean annual discharge of water supposed to be 184,212,079,642 tons, a large proportion of its waters being consumed in irrigation and evaporation. The Indus is navigable from the sea as high as the influx of the Cabool river, near Attock, at 942 m. from the sea, and its tributaries are mostly so to the foot of the mountains, about 700 m.; but the channel is so encumbered by shifting banks, as to be only adapted for steamers, and vessels of comparatively small draft. The gawial, or long-snouted alligator, is abundant in the river, and the common alligator is found in its lagoons. The belon, a cetacean, is also common. Fish, especially the polla, a species of carp, are very abundant, and form a chief article of food for the natives. The country immediately adjacent to its banks, in its delta especially, is of high fertility; but at no great distance, on either side, this region is flanked by a bare desert; and wood fuel is everywhere so scarce, that there is little immediate prospect of making the Indus a high route for steam navigation, unless the coal recently discovered near it in the Punjab and Afghanistan should prove to be suitable in quality, and in adequate quantity for the undertaking.

IONIAN ISLANDS, a group in the Mediterranean, off the W. coast of Greece and Epirus, forming a republic dependent on Great Britain, between lat. 36° and 40° N., lon. 19° and 28° E., and consisting of Corfu, Cephalonia, Zante, Santa Maura, Ithaca, Paxo, and Cerigo, with Pano, Meriera, Meganisi, Kalamo, Servi, Cerigotto, and many smaller islands. United area 1,041 sq. m., and pop. (1858) 241,493. Surface mountainous, and generally rugged and covered with heath; but in some of the larger islands are fertile plains. In all the islands, in 1836, 420,151 acres, or somewhat less than half their surface, were estimated to be under cultivation, yielding wheat, barley, wine, olive oil, currants, cotton, flax, and pulse. Live stock, horses, horned cattle, sheep, and goats. Manufactures consist of woollen fabrics for home consumption, soap in Corfu and Zante, salt in Zante and Santa Maura, silk fabrics in Zante, earthenware, goats' hair carpets, linens, and sackings. Ship-building is an important branch of industry, and many of the pop. are occupied in maritime trade and navigation. Exports consist chiefly of the natural produce; imports comprise corn, live stock from Greece and Albania, woven fabrics, cured fish, and colonial produce, which in 1849, amounted in value to 318,242 l.; and the imports to 668,239 l. Government vested in a lord high commissioner appointed by Great Britain, and a parliament consisting of a senate and legislative assembly. The assembly, elected for 5 years, is composed of 40 members, 7 elected by each of the three larger islands, 4 by Santa Maura, 4 by the remaining islands, the rest being nominated by the lord high commissioner. The senate consisting of 5 members, elected by the legislative body, with a president appointed by the commissioner, has the executive power, and the press is under the immediate control of it and the commissioner. Each island is governed by a regent, and a council of from 2 to 10 members, partly elected by the inhabitants and partly nominated by the commissioner and senate; and in these are 21 judicial courts, subordinate to a supreme court in Corfu, in which city is the seat of parliament and chief authorities. The established religion is that of the Greek church. Principal towns, Corfu, Zante, Argostoli, and Vathi. These islands were subject to Venice from 1386 to 1797. In 1814 they were placed under British protection, and their present constitution of government was drawn up in 1817.

be washed, lead, and gold, which was found by the country in Croghan Keshela mountains, who collected pieces from 22 oz. to minute grains, 10,000. in value, asbestos, manganese, fullers' earth, slate, and peat from the bogs, which forms the principal fuel, and is of high importance, owing to the general deficiency of timber. Manufacture consist of paper, glass, tobacco, and especially linen goods, the chief seat of which latter is Ulster, and in that prov. linsens to the estimated value of 4,000,000 annually are made, chiefly in the dwellings of the rural population, and sold to the merchants of Belfast and other large towns. The malt trade and distilling of whisky are extensively carried on. In 1854, 8,772,861 gallons were distilled, and 8,136,362 gallons were entered for home consumption. In the north of Ireland, 300,000 persons are employed in working patterns on machines with the needle Belfast is the centre of this manufacture Gross value of the goods 1,400,000. The wool produced in the country has been estimated to amount in annual value to 300,000, and coarse woollen stuffs are made in the centre of the country besides mixed stuffs and silks in Dublin, Waterford, and other principal cities. In 1870 there were estimated to be in all 91 cotton, woollen, and flax mills, employing 41,149 persons, and steam and water power equivalent to that of 4,332 horses. The conversion of grain into flour and meal has latterly become an extensive business. Principal exports are raw produce wheat, oats flour butter, bacon, beef eggs, wool, flax, ore, and spirits. Imports comprise coal and culm, fish, salt, woollen and cotton yarn and fabrics with colonial produce. Total value of foreign exports in 1861, 240,000, of imports 7,000,000. Number of vessels entered during the same year, 22,135 British, and 2,431 foreign ships, with an aggregate burden of 3,140,209 tons. It has 22 coast lighthouses and 3 floating lights. In 1852, 225,000 emigrants left, and 1,404,000 was remitted from America by emigrants to take out their friends. In 1864, 253,667 persons landed in Liverpool from Ireland. Public revenue in 1863, 5,961,900, expenditure 3,576,802. Principal commercial ports are Dublin, Belfast, Cork, Limerick Waterford and Londonderry. The Grand and Royal canal intersect the country from E. to W., and connect Dublin with Ballinacloe and Trimouherry on the Shannon. In 1863, 1,470 m. of railway were completed, and many more projected. Railways connect Dublin with Belfast on the N., Cork and Waterford on the S., and Galway on the W. Chief branches, on the N., Belfast to Balyleena, Newton Ards, and Armagh, Dundalk to Castleblaney, and Drogheda to Kells. Dublin to Kingstown and Bray, Tipperary to Limerick, and Mallow to Kilkenny. Lines of electric telegraph wires have been laid between the principal towns, and a submarine line connects England and Ireland. In 1849, Government appointed Commissioners to conduct the sale of encumbered estates, and down to 1853, 19,430,401 was the amount of sales, and 6,446,164 was the sum paid to creditors and mortgagees. In 1853 an exhibition of national industry was held in Dublin. Ireland has, since 1800, been represented in the British House of Lords by 28 temporal peers elected for life, and 4 spiritual peers, who take office in rotation, and since the Reform Act, in the H. of C. by 105 members, 2 elected by each co., 3 by each of the cities, Dublin, Cork, Limerick, and Waterford, the towns Belfast and Galway, and Trinity College, Dublin, and 1 by each of 27 other towns. Total registered electors (1851), 180,546, being 136,945 in counties, and 28,501 in cities and boroughs. The electoral franchise rests with much the same classes as in England, in boroughs both the parliament and municipal right of voting is in 104 householders, resident within 7 m. The local government is vested in the Lord Lieutenant, assisted by the secretary for Ireland, and a privy council nominated by the crown. The judicial power is with the Lord Chancellor, the master of the rolls, and 12 circuit-judges. Each county has a lieutenant, aided by an indefinite number of deputy-lieutenants, and a police force appointed by the crown. The Protestants are most prevalent in Ulster, and parts of Leinster. The established religion is Episcopalian, with two archbishoprics (Armagh and Dublin) and 10 bishoprics, their total incomes amounting in 1852 to 67,530. The Roman Catholic Church (unendowed by law) has 4 archbishoprics and 33 bishoprics. The national schools, aided by annual parliamentary grants, amounted in 1850 to 4,704, attended by 520,401 pupils. There is a university in Dublin and colleges have been endowed by government in Cork, Galway, and Belfast. There are 13 public lunatic asylums, which had, in 1853, 2,870 patients, supported at a total cost of 41,017. Number of paupers on poor's roll in 1852, 141,822, of whom 30,839 were out door—the total expenditure being 686,241, do in 1853, 106,746, of whom 2,212 were out door—expenditure 78,718. The greater part of the Irish are descendants of the aboriginal Celts, with an admixture of warriors the north, of Saxons, probably the Scots of the 6th century and, in later times, of English and Scottish emigrants. The Erse, a dialect of the Celtic, is the native language and is now chiefly used in the west part of the country. Their dark complexion, and smaller and more slender form of body, as well as their more volatile temperament, distinguish the Irish from the Saxon. In the year 432, Christianity was introduced by St Patrick. From the 8th to the 12th century, the country was the scene of perpetual wars between the petty kings and their chiefs. In 1174, Henry II of England conquered the country, and partitioned it out among his Anglo-Norman followers. In the reign of King John the division into counties took place, and English laws and customs were partially introduced. But the powerful barons continued to resist the government of Henry VII., Elizabeth, and James I., with repeated outbreaks and rebellions. The most memorable of these were in 1611, 1639, and 1703. In 1800 the union of Ireland with England took place. In 1829 the Roman Catholic emancipation act was passed, in 1832 the Irish reform bill, in 1838 the poor law bill. In 1844 the Irish repeal agitation was at its height, and, in 1848, an insurrection of the populace took place, but was speedily put down. The wolf and elk or moose deer belonged to Ireland, and bones of the latter have been found.

The continental portion of the country is separated from the rest of Europe by the chain of the Alps, and its waters belong entirely to the basin of the Mediterranean Sea. The coast has a development of about 3,174 m. The shores of the Adriatic are little indented, and on the N. are shallow and bordered by marshes; those of the Ionian Sea are flat only at the foot of the Gulf of Tarentum; the W. shores of Italy are generally more elevated than the eastern, except in the Marosmo, at the mouths of the Arno, and in the Pontine marshes. The chief islands are Sicily, Sardinia, Corsica, Elbe, Malta, and the Lipari Islands. The principal gulfs and bays are, in the Adriatic, those of Venice and Manfredonia; in the Ionian Sea, Tarentum and Squillace; the Gulf of Genoa, and the bays of St Eufemia, Policastro, Salerno, Naples, and Gaeta; and the chief straits those of Messina and Bonifacio. The most prominent capes are Piombino, Argentario, Circeo, Campanella, Spartivento, and Leuca, on the two S. points. The country is generally well watered, but, except the Po, the rivers are small and generally mere torrents; the chief of these are, in the basin of the Adriatic, the Tagliamento, Piave, Brenta, Po, Aterno, Sangro, and Ofanto; in the basin of the Ionian Sea, the Bradano; and in that of the Mediterranean, the Arno, Ombrone, Tiber, Garigliano, and Volturno; the Rhone forms part of the frontier of Savoy. Italy has some of the largest mountain lakes in Europe; the chief are Geneva, Maggiore, Garda, and Lugano, portions of which only belong to the territory.—Como and Iseo, which are entirely Italian. On the S. slope of the Apennines are the small lakes of Trasimene, Bolsena, Bracciano, Lucino, and Celano, mostly of classic interest. Italy is divided naturally into a N. portion beyond the peninsula, including the vast basin of the Po—a prolongation of the basin of the Adriatic—the surface of which rises gradually to Piedmont, in the N.W.; and the central and S. portion, or the true peninsula, which in general is mountainous or hilly, traversed throughout its length by the chain of the Apennines, from which considerable plains, nearly level, extend along its shores. From its position, form, and configuration, Italy enjoys a varied and excellent climate, which permits the productions of the temperate and some of those of the torrid zone, to mingle on its almost uniformly fertile surface. The exceptions to this are the pestilential marshes, especially the Marosmo in Tuscany, the theatre of a prolonged struggle between human industry and the malignity of the climate, and now nearly deserted. Snow lies during the year only in the Alps, at an elevation of 9,500 feet; the valley of the Po has a temperate climate, resembling that of the centre of France; its lakes and portions of the lagoons of Venice are frozen in winter; and the orange and lemon do not ripen in the open air. In the region between lat. 36° 30' and 40° 30' N., snow falls only on the slopes of the mountains, and the olive, orange, and citron ripen in the open air; between lat. 30° and 41° 30' N., snow is very rare, and in the S. of Calabria, Sicily, and the neighbouring islands, the climate permits of the cultivation of tropical plants. Mean annual temperature—Milan (lat. 50° 28'), 55° 2; Venice (lat. 45° 25'), 55° 4; Florence (lat. 43° 46'), 53° 2; Rome (lat. 41° 54'), 60° 6; Naples (lat. 40° 56'), 60° 6; Palermo (lat. 38° 6'), 68° 1, Fahr. The prevailing winds of Italy are W. and S.W., during which the air is pure and healthy, but the S. portion of the country is frequently visited by the pestilential winds of Africa, the Strucco and Libeccio, during which vegetation is arrested, and the human frame becomes languid and feeble; fever is prevalent in the marshy districts. Italy is rich in mineral products, but has few metals, except iron and lead. The Apennines supply the beautiful marble of Carrara. Sulphur, borax, salt, nitre, alum, alabaster, lava, and other volcanic productions, are abundant. There is one active volcano (Vesuvius) in the peninsula, and four in the islands (Ætna, Stromboli, Vulcano, and Vulcanello); there are many mineral and gaseous springs. The vegetable productions of Italy are extremely varied; the Alps afford excellent pasture, and forests with a great variety of timber. The fauna resembles that of the rest of Europe in similar latitudes, except that it embraces the buffalo, and among vipers the asp, scorpion, and tarantula. Fish are abundant in the rivers. The horses of Piedmont are valued, and in the S. their place is supplied by excellent mules. The coasts of Sicily furnish sponges and coral; the chief products of the soil are corn in Sicily and in the plain of the Po, which last also possess the only extensive rice fields in Europe. The chestnut forms an important article of food in the Apennines. The vine, olive, and other fruit trees yield abundant crops; and in the S. the sugar-cane, orange, and fig are cultivated; the culture of the mulberry, and the rearing of the silk-worm, forms an important branch of industry, and cotton is cultivated with success. Cattle are reared to a considerable extent in the N., and goats and swine in the S. The manuf., except in the N., unimportant, comprise silk, chiefly in Lombardy and Piedmont, the other manufs. are woollens, silk, gauze, porcelain, artificial flowers, hats, paper, parchment, and musical instrument. The principal imports are colonial goods, linen, woolen and cotton fabrics, jewellery, and dried fish. Chief exports, silk, wool, oil, honey, straw hats, and Parmesan cheese; but commerce has greatly declined. The arts and sciences are still cultivated with considerable success. Throughout the whole of Italy, except Savoy and Corsica, Italian, in very different dialects, is the language of the country, but it is spoken in its purity only in Tuscany. The established religion is Roman Catholic. Notwithstanding the natural advantages of the country, the general population of Italy is in a state of the most abject poverty, and the value of human life is nearly the lowest in the scale of European nations. Under the Romans, Italy was divided into the provs. of Cisalpine-Gaul, and Venetia in the N.; Italy Proper in the centre; and Magna-Græcia in the S. The political arrangements of Modern Italy were changed for a time by the aggressions of Napoleon I. In 1801, Savoy and Piedmont were united to France, the duchy of Milan formed the Cisalpine republic, to which, in 1805, the duchy of Venice and its continental possessions were added, forming together the kingdom of Italy; and Genoa was incorporated with France; Naples was seized, the pope and the other sovereigns were deposed, and thus all Italy, except Sicily and Sardinia, was subjected to the Emperor of France. After the dismemberment of the French Empire in 1814, the states were restored to their former rulers, except the duchies of Milan and Venice, which were given to Austria, and formed the Lombardo-Venetian kingdom. Length 130 m., average breadth 40 m. Area 4,250 sq. m. Pop (1848) 370,090. The blue mountains traverse the whole length of the island from E. to W., varying in elevation from 5,000 to 6,000 feet; on their S. side the shores are abrupt, the surface broken, and the scenery bold; on the N. the country is undulating, and descends gradually to the sea, and this side of the island is reputed to be the more healthy. Mean annual temperature at Kingston, 78° S. summer 81°, winter 76° 2. Fahr. Rainy seasons, from May to August, and from October to November. Earthquakes are frequent; hurricanes less so than in the other West India islands. The island is well watered. Principal rivers, the Minho, Black River, and Cubre, all flowing to the S. coast. Valuable quarries of lithographic stone were discovered in 1853, and traces of coal were also found. The mountains are of calcareous formation. Most of the staple products of tropical climates are raised. Indigo, cotton, and cacao were formerly more important staples than at present. Malze, Guinea corn, and rice are the chief grains raised. The plantain, banana, sweet potato, etc., compose the principal food of the blacks. Fine fruits are plentiful. Sunflower seeds are raised for the manufacture of oil. Other products are cinnamon, fine woods, and artificial grasses. Live stock in general are good, as well as numerous.

About 7-8ths of the land belong to private individuals; estates seldom exceed 1,200 acres, and have become more subdivided since the epoch of slave emancipation. In 1840 its export of sugar was 617,500 cwt., and in 1852 it was only 511,000 cwt. From pecuniary aid granted by the British government in 1853, its condition is more prosperous. In 1848 the exports consisted of sugar, rum, coffee, pimento, ginger, dye and hard wood, and copper; the total exports being estimated at 1,595,258*l.*; and imports in the same year to 457,008*l.* in value. Principal ports, Kingston, Montego Bay, and Falmouth. Jamaica is divided into 9 coas., Middlesex, Surrey, and Cornwall, and subdivided into 21 parishes. Government vested in a governor, and a council of 12 members, nominated by the crown, and a legislative assembly of 45 members, 2 elected by every pa., and one by each of the chief towns. All male inhabitants having freeholds of 10*l.* a year, may vote for representatives, which latter must have an estate of 300*l.* a year, or personal property worth 1,000*l.* A supreme court in Spanish-Town, and courts of assize in each co., sit three times yearly. The island is the see of a bishop, whose diocese extends over the Bahamas and Honduras, and has Presbyterian, Methodist, Baptist, and Moravian churches. Military force consists usually of about 3,000 regular troops, and a militia of from 16,000 to 18,000 men. Public revenue and expenditure, annual average, 600,000*l.* Besides Spanish-Town, the cap., and Kingston, the chief port (between which a railway has been completed), the island contains the town Port Royal, on its S. side; and the maritime villa. Mount Luces, Montego, Falmouth, and St Ann's on its N. coast. Jamaica was discovered by Columbus in 1494, colonized by Spaniards in 1510, and taken by the English in 1655. The maroons, originally runaway slaves, obtained a tract of land on the N. side of the island in 1738, on which they built two small towns, and, with the exception of a rebellion in 1795, have remained peaceable. In 1852 40,000 of the pop. died of cholera; while, from 1840 to 1850 the emigrants amounted only to 14,000.

JAPAN, an empire of Eastern Asia, comprising the islands Nippon, Kinsiu, and Sikok, with the dependencies Yesso, the S. part of Tarakai or Saghalien, and many smaller islands, situated between lat. 26° 35' and 48° N., lon. 129° and 135° E., having W. the Strait of Corea and Sea of Japan, and on other sides the Pacific Ocean. Area 366,500 sq. m. Pop. 30,000,000 (?) These islands, especially Nippon and Kinsiu, are extremely irregular in shape, their coasts greatly indented, and surface very uneven. The snow-capped mountains Fusi, and Siro-Jama in Nippon, are active volcanoes, estimated respectively at 12,000 and 8,000 feet above the sea. Rivers numerous, and generally wide at their mouths, but their courses are short, and not navigable for many miles inland. Of the lakes, the principal appears to be Fukoni, regarded by the Japanese with superstitious reverence. The interior of Japan, however, remains quite unexplored by Europeans. In a country extending over 16° of lat., the climate is so varied, that almost every prov. has different products; it is in general mild and healthy, but hurricanes and earthquakes are of frequent occurrence. The soil is said to be in many parts sterile, but it is very carefully cultivated; agriculture being compulsory by summary laws. Products are in great variety; the chief are rice, potatoes, gourds, numerous fruits common in Southern Europe, hemp, cotton, ginger, tobacco, tea in large quantity; oak, maple, iron-wood, cypress, and fir timber, varnish, camphor, seja desicha from which soy is made; bellion, iron, lead, tin, copper, diamonds and other gems, coal, lime, sulphur, nitre, salt, and amber. Cattle rearing is unimportant; buffaloes and oxen are used only for draught, and sheep are scarce. Fish and coral abound on the coasts; pearls and ambergris are obtained. In some rural arts, the Japanese are unequalled; such as the dwarfing of forest trees, and raising radishes and other bulbous roots of an enormous size. In manufacturing industry, generally, they equal the Chinese, and their sword-blades and other metallic goods, telescopes, clocks, silk and cotton fabrics, porcelain, lacquered and japanned wares, and paper, are particularly excellent. Some trade is allowed with Chinese merchants, who bring broad-cloths and other woollen stuffs to Nangasaki, in return for sea-slug, copper, and lacquered wares; and the Dutch are permitted to send annually two ships to the same port with wax, camphor, spices, ivory, lead, iron-bars, quicksilver, glass wares, musk, sapan-wood, sugar, piece goods, and woollens, for which they take back copper, camphor, silk, lacquered goods, wax, pitch, wheat, and Japanese manufactures. No commerce has hitherto been allowed with other foreign nations; but on 31st March 1854 a general convention of peace and amity was signed between Japan and the U. S. of North America, by which the port of Simoda was at once opened to the ships of the latter for trade and protection. In 1855 the ports of Nagasaki and Hakodade were opened to the commerce of all nations. The American government has consuls or agents in Japan. Two centuries of peace has elevated the civilization of the Japanese over all other extra-European nations of the old world. The law, which separates them from intercourse with other countries, has forced them to draw on their own resources, hence the empire is nearly independent of external aid.—It is a world in itself. The government is despotic, and, like some others in Asia, is shared by ecclesiastical and military sovereigns. The mikado, or lord of the dairi, or court of niakho, is the nominal head of the empire, has almost divine honours, exerts religious rule, and was anciently invested with all the authority; but in the 12th century, a siogun, or high military officer was appointed, one of whose successors, in 1603, assumed the rank of a second emperor: since which period the siogun has maintained the actual sway, the dairi sovereign being consulted by him only regarding relations with foreign powers. The siogun, who resides at Yeddo, is assisted by a council of five hereditary princes, and by a senate which forms the legislative body, and decides in all civil and criminal cases. A kind of feudal system prevails; the princes, of whom there are about 200, governing different districts, are obliged to maintain troops in readiness to move at the order of the siogun. The executive duties are performed by 7 boards,—those of taxation, commerce, public works, police, criminal justice, military affairs, and religion. Japan is divided into 8 provs., 68 depa., and 622 dists., the governors of which are termed dat-mei, "high named," and hold their offices direct from the daimi sovereign; or sai-mie, "well-annointed," who are appointed by the shogun. The laws are very rigorous; many popular rights and customs, however, appear to exist, and the Japanese are certainly less corruptly governed, and less shackled by ancient usages, than the Chinese. The ancient religion is the sin-sin, whose priests were said to be descended of the sun, but the majority of the pop. are adherents of Buddhism, introduced into Japan about the 6th century of the Christian era, though some profess the doctrines of Confucius. The Japanese are of the Mongolian race, and are stout and well made. They have a written literature, some science, and a taste for music. Their language is different from that of the Chinese.

JAVA, one of the Sunda islands, the principal of the Dutch East Indian Islands, between lat. 5° 32' and 6° 50' S., lon. 105° 15' E., separated E. from Bali by the Strait of Bali, and W. from Sumatra by the Strait of Sunda, having N. the Sea of Java, and S. the Indian Ocean. Length, E. to W., 570 m., breadth varies from 48 to 115 m. Estimated area, including the contiguous island Madura, etc., 52,000 sq. m. Pop. (1853) 9,943,974, comprising Europeans; and assimilated natives, 17,385; Chinese, 125,047; Arabs, Bughis, with orientals, 9,790,978; serons, 9,410. The S. coast is high and steep, with few indentations. A mountain chain extends through the centre from W. to E., with a mean elevation of 1,000 feet, having numerous volcanic peaks, some of which rise to 10,000 feet. Its N. coast is low and marshy, and lined with numerous small islands. Principal river the Solo, besides which many are navigable for several miles from the sea, or are used for floating down timber, and other raw produce from the interior. The rocks are chiefly basaltic and volcanic, and the soil is extremely fertile. Java is the granary of the Asiatic Archipelago, and is supposed to be capable of supporting many times its present amount of population, only about one-third of the surface being under culture; its temperature hot in the plains, but cooler in the elevated parts. Earthquakes and thunder storms are common, hurricanes rare. Rice is the principal grain, and is cultivated all along the coast, as also in all the low grounds wherever irrigation can be effected. Coffee is the great staple of export; it is raised in most of the uplands, especially in the Preanger or Priang regencies on the W. part of the island, and with sugar, its culture has greatly increased within the last few years. Indigo, tobacco, cotton, cinnamon, maize, and other dry grains, pulses and vegetable oils, coconuts, and sago, are other principal products. Java is the only island of the Eastern Archipelago of which the teak tree is a native. This tree grows in dense forests on the hills, and is superior to that of Pegu, though not equal to that of Malabar. Zoology comprises tigers, tiger cat, and leopards, the jackall, and rhinoceros. Buffaloes are numerous, and a small breed of horses. Black cattle and goats are common; sheep and hogs scarce. Domestic poultry are plentiful. Crocodiles and serpents abound, and fish are numerous in the adjacent seas. Minerals comprise iron, salt, sulphur, and nitre. It has manufs. of cotton fabrics, and other household necessities. Nearly all the exports consist of vegetable produce, coffee, sugar, indigo, and rice, the principal remaining articles being arrack, provisions, hides, cinnamon, rattans, spices, Banca tin, tobacco, edible birds' nests, and salt. Imports comprise cottons, woollens, and other manufactured goods, wines, spirits, iron, hardware, machinery, opium, and articles of luxury. Ships entering the ports, chiefly Dutch or Asiatic, 1,537, aggregate burden 134,800 tons. Trade with the Netherlands absorbs 5-7ths of the whole, and is chiefly carried on by the Dutch East India Company. Batavia, the cap., is the centre of at least half of the general trade. Government administered by a governor-general, with authority over all the Dutch East India colonies, and assisted by a secretary-general, and a council of 4 members, of Dutch descent. Java is divided into 22 residences, in each of which are a European governor, and secretary, and various sub-residents. The provs. are subdivided into arronds, and communes, in each of which is a justice of the peace. Three superior tribunals and courts-martial are seated at Batavia, Samarang, and Surabaya, the whole subordinate to a supreme court at Batavia. There is complete religious toleration, and Europeans are not prevented from going to Java, though the permission of the governor-general is necessary to their settling there. Public improvements have been much extended. A good road traverses the island in its entire length; many forts have been constructed in the interior; and commercial stations planted in the S. part of the island; regular steam communication is kept up with Singapore. There are several native states in the interior, under Dutch protection, the principal caps. of which are Surakarta and Yagycarta. Java was under Hindoo sovereignties until 1478, when it was conquered by the Arabs, and its possession has since been chiefly Mohammedan. It contains the ruins of several considerable cities and temples, the principal being Mojopahit and Boro-Budor, and various large structures of substantial architecture are scattered over its surface. The Javaneses are of the Malay family, are short, thick-set, and robust. It is presumed that Hindoos, at an early period, settled in the island, as Hindoo monuments of antiquity are found. The religion is Mohammedan, mixed with Buddhism, 3 dialects of the Malay language, are used; and they have an ancient sacred language, com-

taining a number of Sanscrit words. They have a national literature, and translations from the Arabic and Sanscrit. The Javanese are superior in civilization to other natives of the Indian Archipelago. The Portuguese formed a settlement on it in 1511, and the Dutch in 1575. The British held the island from 1811 to 1816.

JENNET, Jersey, the largest and most S.E. of the islands belonging to Great Britain, in S. of the English Channel, 13 m. W. the coast of France (Cotentin), and 35 m. S. Portland-isle. Lat. of St. Helier's 49° 11' 3" N., lon. 2° 1' W. Length E. to W. 12 m., average breadth 5 m. Area 39,000 ac. Pop. 57,020. Coasts rocky and abrupt; the only considerable inlet is St. Aubin's Bay, on the E. side, skirted by a sandy shore. Surface undulating, the hill ranges consisting of granite and schist, run mostly N. to S., enclosing several fertile valleys. Climate mild. Mean annual temperature 51°.9, mean summer 63°.2, mean winter 45°.6, Fahr. Little corn raised, the chief produce being apples; the whole island appears like a continuous orchard. About 2,000 hds. of oxen are annually exported. Cows of a small and good breed are numerous, and butter is exported. Sheep are few. Off the S.E. coast are oyster beds, fished by the islanders. Manufs. are hosiery and shoes. Has an active trade with Britain. Exports to England, chiefly cattle, potatoes, spirits, oysters, and granite, in return for cotton and woollen fabrics, hardware and cutlery, glass, soap, earthenwares, about 20,000 tons of coal annually, and general merchandise. Foreign imports, wine, brandy, skins, fruit, poultry, timber, tallow, hemp, linens, and corn. Reg. shipping (1852) 370 vessels, aggregate burden 34,000 tons, besides oyster smacks. Steamers communicate frequently with Southampton, Weymouth, St. Malo, and Granville. It has its own legislature, the "States" or insular parliament, consisting of 36 members, chosen by the inhabitants, their acts being confirmed or annulled, in special cases, by the Viscount or English governor. From the decisions of its royal court, appeal lies only to the sovereign in council. The military governor has under him usually about 300 regular troops, besides which Jersey has a militia of 2,500 men, with an artillery battalion. The island is divided into 12 par., in the diocese of Winchester. Its native inhabitants speak a French patois, and preserve many Norman feudal customs, the Channel Islands having formed a part of the Norman dominions, and remained attached to England since the conquest. Principal towns, St. Helier, the cap., and St. Aubin.

JERUSALEM (Hebrew Kayushah, Arabic El Kuds or Khodes, "the holy," ancient Hierosolyma, and Elia Colonia), a city of Palestine, interesting as the seat of the most important events described in Scripture, is now comprised in the Turkish pash. Damascus, and near the centre of the mountain region, between the Mediterranean and the Dead Sea, 33 m. S.E. its port Jaffa, and 2,060 feet above the sea. Lat. 31° 48' 43" N., lon. 35° 13' E. Mean annual temperature 62°.8, summer 75°.8, winter 49°.6, Fahr. Stationary pop. variously estimated from 10,000 to 20,000, but about Easter the number is annually augmented by a great crowd of Christian, Mohammedan, and Jewish pilgrims. The modern city, on a tongue of land, between the valley of the Kedron (Valley of Jehoshaphat) on the N. and E., and that of Gihon (valley of Hinnom), which joins the former immediately on the S.E., occupies the four hills of Zion and Acra on the W., and Moriah and Bezetha on the E.; these hills being separated by a deep longitudinal valley, extending from N. to S., and the two former again by a transverse valley, the ancient Tyropoeon. The hills are of limestone, and the surrounding country is not fertile. The city is about 2½ m. in circumference, surrounded by walls of hewn stone, built in the 16th century, and probably enclosing the same area that Jerusalem has had since the days of Hadrian; but the city, previously to its destruction by Titus, is conjectured to have been nearly twice as extensive; and a part even of Mount Zion, the site of the citadel of David, is not comprised within the modern walls. Jerusalem is at present entered by four gates facing toward the cardinal points. The public ways are narrow, ill paved, and dull. All the edifices possessing any interest are of a religious character. On Mount Moriah is an oblong area, 510 yards in length, N. to S., by a breadth varying from 318 to 350 yards, and which anciently formed the site of the famous temple, and probably also of the fortress of Antonia. This area is still enclosed by walls, which, on the E. side, form a part of the outer wall of the city, and both there, and at the S.W. corner, are portions composed of stones of vast size, considered to have formed parts of the identical walls raised by Solomon or his successors. Traces of an ancient bridge connecting the temple with Mount Zion, across the valley of the Tyropoeon, and mentioned by Josephus in his account of the capture of the city by Titus, have been discovered. The tower of Hippicus, on the W. side of the city (mentioned by ancient authorities as the starting point of the three lines of walls, which at different periods enclosed it), is still to be identified, as are the pools of Hezekiah, Gihon, and Siloam, the vaults and cisterns of the temple, and some of the ancient gates now walled up; but few other sites of antiquity are now traceable, and the localities pointed out by the monks as those of the actual Via Dolorosa of the Holy Sepulchre, etc., have, at best, but an apocryphal claim to their title. Among the most conspicuous modern buildings, are the mosques of Omar (Kubbeh es-Sahrah, "dome of the rock"), an elegant octagonal edifice erected between A.D. 686 and 693, in the centre of the temple area; the mosque of El Akra, at the S.W. extremity of the same area; the church of the Holy Sepulchre, a Byzantine edifice, erected by Helena, the mother of Constantine the Great, over the reputed site of the sepulchre, on Mount Akra; the Greek, Coptic, and Latin convents, and the ruined palace of the Hospitallers, on the same mount; the Armenian and Syrian convents, and the church of St James on Mount Zion; the church of St Anna, and the reputed birthplace of the Virgin on Mount Bethetha; and the modern citadel close to the Jaffa gate. Between Mounts Moriah and Bethetha is a deep reservoir, which the monks have named Bethesda; Robinson, however, conjectures that the true Pool of Bethesda was what is now called the Fountain of the Virgin, in the Valley of Jehoshaphat, without the walls, and which communicates with the Pool of Siloam by an artificial subterranean conduit beneath Mount Ophel. Outside of the walls are also the (so-called) House of Caiaphas, now an Armenian convent, the Moslem tomb, and mosque of David, the Armenian, Greek, and Latin cemeteries, all on Mount Zion; the Pools of Gihon, and the remains of an ancient aqueduct; on the N., the Mohammedan cemeteries, the edifices designated the tombs "of the Kings and of the Judges." On the E., in the Valley of Jehoshaphat, are numerous other tombs, and the garden of Gethsemane, beyond which rises the Mount of Olives, having on its S. and S.W. the Mount of Offence and vill. of Siloam. On the S. the Valley of Hinnom (Gihon), is bounded by the Hill of Evil Counsel. Jerusalem has some manufs. of soap, but its principal trade is in rosaries, and similar products made in the city; in the middle ages vast quantities of earth were removed from holy localities within the walls, and shipped to form the famous campo santo at Pisa. The city was originally taken from the Jebusites by the Hebrews under Joshua about B.C. 1400; was taken and destroyed by Nebuchadnezzar, B.C. 588; rebuilt by command of Cyrus, B.C. 536; again taken by Ptolemy Soter, B.C. 324, and subjugated to Egypt; afterwards held by the Maccabees; taken by Pompey, B.C. 63; and held as a Roman city under Herod, who rebuilt the temple, until its almost total destruction by the troops of Titus, A.D. 70. At this period, in the words of Pliny, it was the most famous city, not only of Palestine, but of the whole east. In A.D. 135, the Jews were finally dispersed, and the city was again rebuilt by Adrian. It was captured by the Persians in 614, by the Saracens under Omar in 637, in 1099 by the Crusaders, under Godfrey of Bouillon, and held by the Christians for 88 years, when it was again captured by the forces of Saladin in 1187, and it has remained under Turkish government ever since, except for a short interval during 1832, when it was taken by the Egyptians under Ibrahim Pasha. It has since become the see of a Protestant bishop, appointed alternately by the governments of Great Britain and Prussia. The inhabitants, consisting of Mohammedans, Jews, and Christians, are generally very poor. The language spoken is the Arabic.

Surface diversified; portions of it has patches of pasture land, other parts a barren and a sandy desert. This territory has no running waters, the periodical rains producing temporary lakes of salt water, formed by damming up the streams flowing down from the sand hills and intervening gulleys. The Kanod Sar, the largest of these lakes, is 18 m. long when fullest, and retains water throughout the year. When the water is at its height, a small stream leaves it at its E. side, and after a course of 30 m. is lost in the sands of Jondpora. Water is very scarce, wells being dug 300 feet deep to obtain supplies. Irrigation is difficult. Cold severe in winter, and in summer the thermometer is sometimes as high as 120° Fahr. at noon. Millet is the chief crop. Annual revenue 8,500l.—Jesselmere, cap. of the foregoing state, is in lat. 26° 55' N., lon. 70° 58' E. Pop. 35,000. The town is enclosed by walls of loose stone. It comprises the upper part of the valley drained by the Gores river, with the mountains rising on each side. Surface very elevated. At Leepokee Than, on the south frontier, it rises 1,952 feet, and at the Oota Dhooora Pass into Hlundee, it is not less than 15,000 feet above the sea. The elevated tracts on the E. and W. are unexplored, being covered all the year with snow. The summit of Nanda Devi is 25,749 feet above the sea. Snow falls from the beginning of October till the end of May, averaging, according to situation, from 6 to 12 feet deep, but in confined or depressed situations, successive avalanches often cause accumulations, several hundred feet thick. In summer the thermometer ranges at sunrise from 40° to 55°, noon 65° to 75° in the shade, and from 90° to 110° Fahr. in the sun. The natives of Jueahr carry on an active trade to all parts of Tibet by the Oota Dhooora Pass, sheep and goats being used as beasts of burden. Wheat crop is poor.

KAFFA, CAFFA or FEODORIA. [THEODORIA.]

KAFFA, a country of E. Africa, N. of Abyssinia, between two heads of the Gojoh river, near lat. 7° N., lon. 36° 30' E., and with a cap. named Bonga. KAFFRARIA, KAFFRARIA or KAFIRLAND, an extensive region of S.E. Africa, represented in old maps as extending N. to Abyssinia, but now understood to comprise the space between lat. 33° and 34° S., lon. 27° 30' and 28° 30' E., bounded E. and S. by the Indian Ocean, S.W. and W. by the Keiskama (which separates it from the dist. Victoria), the Chumie, and the Klis Plat rivers, and N., indefinitely, by a chain of mountains in a direction from E. to W. Area not known. Pop. (1849) 67,358. The S.E. portion of the country (called by the natives Amakosa, and inhabited by the Kosaa, or Kaffirs proper) is watered by numerous streams, the chief of which are the Great Kei, Somersset, Buffalo, and Keiskama, all of which rise in the mountainous country of the interior, and flow S.E. to the Indian Ocean. Beyond these mountains on the N., is the country of the Amatembu Kaffirs, or Tambookies, the rivers of which are chiefly affluents of the Great Kei. The mountains are composed of trap-rocks. Valuable minerals are rare. Soil in many places fertile. The climate differs widely from that of the Cape Colony. Here winter is the dry season. From May to August it seldom rains. In summer the rainy season sets in with terrific thunder storms. In spring the temperature of the plains seldom exceeds 50° Fahr.; in summer it is between 70° and 90°, and before storms it frequently rises to upwards of 100° Fahr. The Kaffirs are described as hospitable, intelligent, acute and brave, but dishonest and superstitious. The rite of circumcision is practised by them. They are generally believed to be of the Negro race, and are of a dark brown colour. The men are tall and active, and more handsome than the women. They have no written characters, but their language is sonorous, resembling Italian. They are simple in their habits, and live on the produce of the chase, and the milk supplied by their numerous herds. Their chief vegetable products are maize, millet, and water melons. They are passionately fond of tobacco. The Kaffirs are divided into hordes, and governed by hereditary chiefs, who exercise absolute rule. They have made many incursions into the Cape Colony, and from 1835 to 1853 frequent skirmishes occurred between them and the colonists, which led to the extension of the colony from the Keiskama to the Great Kei River, a district now called British Kaffraria. Cap. King William Town, on the Buffalo; and, more recently, to the annexation of the new divisions of Victoria and Albert, and to the assumption of the Orange River sovereignty, since abandoned.

KAFIRISTAN or KADIRISTAN ("Land of the Kaffirs"), a country of Central Asia, between lat. 35° and 36° N., lon. 69° 20' and 71° 20' E., enclosed by Afghanistan, Koondoo, Badakshan, and Chitral. Estimated area 7,000 sq. m. It comprises a part of the S. declivity of the Hindoo Koosh, and is traversed by affluents of the Gubool river. Its narrow, but fertile valleys produce an abundance of fruits, with some wheat and millet, and feed large herds of cattle, sheep, and goats. The inhabitants, called Sikā Posh, or Kāfir ("infidels"), by their neighbours, are a remarkable race, resembling Europeans in their persons and many of their habits; they live in a rude and primitive state, and exhibit perpetual enmity towards Mohammedans, by whom their country has been repeatedly invaded, but never conquered. They are very skilful as workers in metals and wood, and are distinguished from surrounding tribes, by drinking wine, sitting on raised seats, expelling their dead without burial, using a language wholly unlike the dialects of the Afghan, Mogul, Hindoo, or adjacent Asiatic nations, with the Caucasian features and complexion, and claiming to be brothers of the Feringi (Europeans). Principal vill. is stated to be Camdashah, with about 500 houses; but little is really known of this region.

S. of North America, in the central part of the union, mostly between lat. 36° 20' and 39° N., lon. 82° and 89° 20' W., having N. and W. the Ohio river, separating it from the states Ohio, Indiana, and Illinois; E. Virginia, S. Tennessee, and W. the Mississippi, dividing it from Missouri. Greatest length 400 m., breadth 170 m. Area estimated at 376,800 sq. m. Pop. 902,465, of whom 210,981 were slaves. Surface in the S.E. is broken by the Cumberland mountains, a branch of the Alleghenies; in the centre is a rich undulating tract, bordering the Ohio, it is hilly and well wooded, as in the level lands of the W. Principal rivers, besides the Ohio and Mississippi, are the Cumberland, Green, Kentucky, Licking, and Tennessee, all affluents of the Ohio. Soil rests throughout on a bed of limestone, apertures in which greatly diminish the rivers in dry seasons. Climate healthy, except near the Mississippi; the winters are, for N. America, cold and humid. Oats, wheat, tobacco, and hemp, are staple products. The crop of tobacco in 1850, reached to nearly 55,500,000 lbs. Maize, and most other grains, cotton, flax, potatoes, apples, and peaches, are raised. The rearing of horses, mules, cattle, and hogs, for export, may, however, be ranked as the prime object of rural industry. The horses amount to 315,000, and the breed is greatly valued throughout the Union. Salt, from mineral springs, is exported in large quantities; iron, coal, marble, lime, and nitre, are other mineral products. Manufs. of cottons, woollens, iron-wares, cordage, and maple sugar, are increasing. Imports and exports are chiefly through New Orleans, by the Ohio and Mississippi rivers. In 1850, 180 m. of railway were open in this state. The Louisville and Portland canal, avoiding the rapids of the Ohio, 2½ m. in length, admits large steamers, and cost 730,800 dollars. The state government, and the senate, consisting of 39 members, are elected for four years; the house of representatives, consisting of 100 members, is elected annually. Revenue (1881) 138,245 dollars. Kentucky sends 10 representatives to Congress. Chief towns, Frankfort, the cap., Louisville, and Lexington.—The Kentucky river rises in the Cumberland mtns., and flowing through the state of Kentucky, after a course generally N.N.W., joins the Ohio at Carrollton. It has been made navigable for steamers throughout 280 miles.

KIMARIA COUNTRY or STRIPS, an extensive region of Central Asia, embracing all the N. part of Turkestan between lat. 44° and 55° N., lon. 63° and 82° E., partly independent, and partly comprised in the Russian governments Orenburg and Tomsk, having E. the Chinese Empire, W. the Caspian Sea, and S. the khanates, Khokan, Bokhara, and Khiva. Estimated area 1,633,000, and Pop. 2,260,000. Surface traversed by many mountain chains, but it chiefly consists of barren plains, abounding in salt lakes, some upwards of 100 m. in length, and into which the principal rivers pour themselves. Climate remarkable for variability, and destructive hurricanes are frequent. The pop. is almost wholly nomadic, and rude in the extreme, their principal occupation being the rearing of sheep, goats, horses, and camels. Some land on river-banks, however, is roughly tilled, for millet, rye, and barley, especially in the S. or Kara-kai-pack country, and seals, sturgeons, etc., are taken in the lakes. Some domestic weaving, and manufs. of hair cordage, soap, leather, and iron wares are carried on; but this region may be considered as the head-quarters of barbarism in Asia, nearly all the manufactured goods and necessities being derived from the adjacent countries, in exchange for cattle, hides, horns, and wool. The Kirghiz are of the Mongol race, and separated into the so-named Great, Little, and Middle hordes, who are again subdivided into numerous tribes, each having its own khan or chief. Their religion is a compound of Islamism and idolatry. There are no towns in the territory, and the apparent remains of any such, or of temples, are certainly the vestiges of a previous race of inhabitants, much more advanced in civilization than the present occupants.

It is a rugged and elevated country, consisting of groups of enormous and lofty ridges, through which the valley of the Sutlej flows, in a direction generally from N.E. to S.W., a distance of 70 m., from lat. 31° 50' to 31° 25' N., lon. 77° 38' E. Principal mountain ridges from N.E. to S.W. are—the Hungrung, crossed by pass of same name, 14,800 feet in elevation; the Runung, 14,500 feet; the Chungrang, 9,300 feet; and the Werang, 13,000 feet elevation of respective passes. A peak in these ridges is 18,300 feet above the sea. The ridges on the N.W. are Rishi Gantung, 21,320 feet, Keobrunk Pass, 18,300 feet, Rock Peak, 31,076 feet, and Glacier Peak, 20,500 feet, in elevation. Three summits of the Bulding Mountains, between the Tidung and the Bupa, have the following elevations:—the Conical Peak 21,000 feet, Cloudy Peak, 19,990 feet, and the Spiry Peak 18,096 feet. South of these, and dividing Koonawur on the N. from Gurhwal and Bussahir on the S., is the Indo-Gangetic range, the principal summits of which vary from 17,000 to 11,500 feet in height, and which is crossed by several passes. On the northern frontier, between the rivers Sutlej and Li, the summit reaches 22,488 feet in elevation above the sea. These mountains are alike in their general appearance, the N.W. being rugged and well wooded, whilst the opposite side is scantily supplied with timber, but affords rich pasturage. In summer the temperature is often oppressively hot in the valley of the Sutlej, in consequence of the radiation of heat from the enclosing rocks. The grape grows well here. Winter is very rigorous, and so much snow falls that the inhabitants are confined to the villages. Grain produced is insufficient for the supply of the population, who live on horse chestnuts in times of scarcity. Chief crops, rice, wheat, millet, barley, potatoes, peas, beans, turnips, and fruit. Great care is bestowed on rearing the bee for its honey. The manufactures are blankets, woollen caps, and coarse woollen shoes, with leather soles. There is considerable commercial intercourse between Koonawur, Hindostan, Chinese Tartary, and Ladakh, in silks, cottons, spices, dye-stuffs, drugs, broadcloth and hardware from Britain, sugar, tins, and butter, the fine wool of goats and sheep, tea, borax, salt, gold and silver. Zoology comprises panthers, black and white bears, wild dogs, birds of various plumage, and snakes are numerous. The superstitious belief of the population is Brahminism in the S., Lamaism in the N., and in the centre, a mixture of the two systems. In Koonawur five separate dialects are spoken.

When the eldest son of a family marries, his parents' property passes to him, and they become dependent on him for maintenance, and his brothers are in a condition little better than servants. In a poor family of more than one son only one marries, and his wife becomes common to all. Surface wholly mountainous, interspersed with narrow valleys, the principal being those of the Upper Indus and its affluents. Soil sterile, and climate severe and variable. The rays of the sun are oppressive. In September, at an elevation of 15,500 feet, the thermometer resting on the rocks, reached 138°; at 14,500 feet, the instrument resting on the sand, gave 130°; and in a tent, 13,000 feet in elevation, it reached 110° Fahr. This phenomenon is attributed to the rarefaction and tenuity of the atmosphere, from elevation and absence of moisture. From December till February the thermometer ranges from 10° to 20° Fahr.; yet the mountain sides being carefully embanked with stone dykes, and industriously cultivated, pretty good crops of wheat, barley, and buckwheat are raised, with apples and apricots. Prangas, a peculiar kind of fodder, is abundant, as is rhubarb. Sulphur, iron, lead, copper, and gold, which abounds in the beds of the rivers, but is prohibited by the government from being collected; and thus country is the great depot for the wool used for the manufacture of Cashmere shawls. The transit trade with all the neighbouring regions is extensive, and conducted mostly by means of mules and sheep. Government despotic, but the rajah is controlled by the priests, who are very numerous. Armed force consists of a peasant-militia, and Ladakhs has been repeatedly under the rule of more powerful neighbours. During the life of Runjeet Singh it formed a part of his dominions. Principal city, Leh.

It stands on elevated ground near the Clyde. Chief buildings, the church, in a niche of which is a colossal statue of the patriot Wallace; the grammar school, library, co. buildings, and gaol, and a branch bank. The bor. is the chief polling-place for the co., and unites with Falkirk, Linlithgow, Airdrie, and Hamilton, in sending 1 member to House of Commons. Near it are the celebrated Falls of the Clyde, and several Roman and feudal remains.

—New Lanark is a vill. in the above pa., on the Clyde, here crossed by a bridge, 1 m. S. Lanark. Pop. 1,842. Has cotton works, founded by the philanthropic David Dale in 1784; and the regulations in which, as respects hours of labour, cleanliness, morals, and education, have excited universal admiration. Robert Owen's first attempts to establish a new system of social organization were made here.

LANKERSHIRE or CLYDESDALE, an inland co. of Scotland, having N. the co. Dumfries and Galloway, E. Linlithgow, Edinburghshire, and Peebles, S. Dumfries, and W. the co. Ayr and Renfrew. Estimated area 945 sq. m., or 604,899 ac., more than one-third part of which is arable. Pop. 866,186. It consists of the whole upper basin of the Clyde, and its affluents, along which, and in the level or N. parts, are some fine agricultural notes; the "saddle ward" of the co. is undeveloped, and the "upper ward" or E. part mountainous and sterile, one summit rising to 2,100 feet, and several others to between 1,500 and 2,000 feet above the sea. Chief crops comprise oats, barley, wheat, turnips, and potatoes. In the middle ward orchards are numerous. Pastures are extensive in the uplands. The breed of draught horses is amongst the best in Scotland. The coal, iron, and lead mines of this co. are very extensive and rich, and all kinds of manufs. are carried on in and around Glasgow in the lower ward, besides which city, the county comprises the towns Lanark, Hamilton, Airdrie, Kilbride, Carlisle, Douglas, and Biggar. It sends 1 member to House of Commons, besides 2 for Glasgow, and 1 for other contributing boroughs. Registered electors for co. (1848) 3,723.

LANCASHIRE, a maritime and palatine co. of England, having N. Cumberland and Westmoreland, E. Yorkshire, S. Cheshire, and W. the Irish Sea, an arm of which, running up into co. Westmoreland, divides it into two unequal parts. Area 1,806 sq. m., or 1,153,840 ac., of which about 850,000 are estimated to be grass and arable. P. (1831) 1,396,834; do. (1851) 2,031,236. Surface rugged and mountainous in the N., where Conistone Fell rises to 2,777 feet above the sea, and on the E. border, where the long ridge, popularly called "The Backbone of England," separates the co. from York, elsewhere generally level. Often deficient in trees, and in a few parts containing extensive bogs or mosses. Principal rivers, the Duddon, Lune, Wyre, Ribbles, Mersey, and Irwell. Besides Conistone Lake, Windermere is partly in this co. Climate mild, but very humid. Carboniferous sandstone and new red sandstone, with limestone, form the principal strata of the co. Soil among the hills moorish or peaty, in the lower district mostly a fertile sandy loam. Potatoes extensively grown. Dairy and hay farms more numerous than arable. Horticulture is pursued on a large scale. The most important mineral is coal, to the abundance of which the co. mainly owes its manufacturing eminence. The Lancashire coal-field is estimated to extend over nearly 400 sq. m. Copper is also raised in the N. of the co. For some notice of the immense cotton, and other manufs. of this co., which are doubtless the most extensive and important on the globe, and for the vast commerce which, notwithstanding the inferior character of the harbours, these manufs. create, see the articles on its chief towns, MANCHESTER, PRESTON, BOLTON, OLDHAM, WIGAN, BURY, CLITHERON, ASHTON, WARRINGTON, ROCHDALE, BLACKBURN, CROKLEY, LANCASTER, and LIVERPOOL. Numerous railways connect these towns with the manufacturing districts of Yorkshire, and all other parts of England and Scotland, as do the Bridgewater, Leeds, and Liverpool, and numerous other canals. Within the last century, the pop. has augmented at a rate of 800 per cent., the increase in the agricultural co. having been but 84 per cent. per annum. The co. is divided into 770 par., and was formerly included in the diocese of Chester, but Manchester has been lately made a bishop's see. It sends 26 members to House of Commons, 4 for the co., and 22 for its cities and towns. Registered electors for co. (1848) N. division 10,710, for S. division 24,178. Lancaster and shire was erected into a duchy and co. palatine, or separate sovereignty, in the reign of Edward III. in favour of his son, John of Gaunt, the progenitor of the Lancastrian sovereigns. In the time of Edward IV. it was re-annexed to the crown. The duchy has many estates in other parts of England, and a court of chancery, with a rev., in 1840, of nearly 35,000*l.*, expenditure 30,346*l.*

Halle, and 80 m. N.W. Dresden. Pop. (1855) 69,980, nearly all Protestants. Elevation 350 feet above the North Sea. Mean temperature of year 48°.4; winter 32°; summer 60°.3, Fahr. Principal edifices, the council-hall, the palace, formerly the residence of the electors and kings of Saxony, the church of St Nicholas, and numerous other churches, the clothmakers' and booksellers' halls, exchange, and post office. Its university, founded in 1409, which ranks as one of the first in Germany, has attached to it a museum of natural history, and a botanic garden. The Augusteum contains a very valuable library. Here are also a civic school, several superior, and many free and primary schools, a large public library, and various scientific collections, orphan, deaf-mute, and lunatic asylums, and a house of correction.—Leipzig is the grand emporium of the book trade of Germany. In 1853 it had 86 printing establishments, with 58 steam and 164 hand presses, by which upwards of 50,000,000 sheets are printed annually. The new year and Michaelmas fairs are attended by a vast concourse of people from most countries of Europe and Western Asia; a wool market is also held here in May. It has manufactures of silk and half-silk fabrics, hosiery, leather, oil-cloths, playing-cards, tobacco, gold and silver articles, snuff, chocolate, starch, soap, liquors, and musical instruments, with numerous engraving, dyeing, and wool spinning establishments. It communicates by railway with Dresden, Berlin, Magdeburg, Halle, Weimar, and Zwickau. Near the end of the 16th century, Leipzig was merely a small Slavonian vill.; in the 19th century it was fortified, and many sanguinary engagements have since taken place in its environs, the most memorable of which was fought on 16th to 18th October 1813, when the French, under Napoleon I., were defeated by the allies.

LEITH, a parl. bor. and seaport town of Scotland, co. and 2 m. N.E. of Edinburgh, on the river or Water of Leith, where it enters the Firth of Forth. Lat. of fort 55° 58' 9" N., lon. 3° 10' 5" W. Area of pas. 1,490 ac. Pop. of do. (1801) 15,272; do. of parl. dist. (1851) 41,508; do. of town 30,919. The town of Leith communicates with, and its houses almost join to those of, Edinburgh, by means of Leith Walk. It also communicates by the Edinburgh and Leith Railway. The town is situated on low lying ground adjoining the Firth, and consists of one old narrow street in the centre, with numerous lanes on each side, and some newer and more spacious streets forming the continuation of Leith Walk, on the E., to which, adjoin the links or meadows. Chief buildings, the royal exchange, town-hall, custom-house, several banks, gaol, Trinity house or Mariners' hospital, and Seafield baths. Leith anciently consisted of two parishes; South Leith, originally Restalrig, and extending to, and comprehending part of the Calton of Edinburgh, with an ancient church, a high school, and endowed Bell's school; and North Leith, comprehending also a portion of the West Church parish of Edinburgh. Here is a modern church, a mariners' church, two quoad sacra pas., Free, United Presbyterian, Independent, Wesleyan Methodist, Episcopalian, and Roman Catholic, churches. Leith fort, 1½ m. W. of the custom-house, is an artillery station. The harbour (outside of which is a martello tower) has, by successive erections of two piers, with a lighthouse on each, been extended upwards of a mile into the Firth, and has been deepened, so as to range from 15 to 20 feet at high water, but is dry at low water. There are two wet-docks, each 250 yards in length, and 100 yards in breadth, with basin of 10 acres extent, capable of containing 150 vessels, and extensive bonded warehouses; Victoria dock, recently formed; also adjoining to these, three dry-docks, each 136 feet long. Across the Water of Leith are two draw-bridges and a stone bridge. Amount of shipping belonging to Leith (1846) 213; aggregate tonnage 23,026 tons. Average customs revenue (1844 to 1849) £2,900. The chief commerce of Leith consists in its colonial and foreign trade and imports of grain. It has steam communication with Hamburg, Hull, Newcastle, Berwick, and to the North of Scotland. Its manufactures are unimportant, and consist chiefly of paints and colours, glass (now declined), sugar refining, preserving meats, iron founding, herring-curing, cooperage, engineer-works, and ship-building. A considerable tract of land, along its beach, is in course of being reclaimed from the sea. Until 1832, when it was erected into a parliamentary burgh, Leith was dependent upon, and governed by the city of Edinburgh, to which it formed the port. In early times its prosperity, then considerable, was often checked by warlike conflicts; in 1541, the town was burnt by an English fleet; in 1549, it was taken possession of by the French troops, who came to the assistance of Mary of Guise. Cromwell repaired its fortifications. It is now governed by a provost, 4 bailies, and 10 councillors. Along with Portobello and Musselburgh, it sends one member to House of Commons. LIBERIA, an independent Negro republic of Western Africa, established 1823, extends along the coast of Guinea, between lat. 4° 50' and 7° N., lon. 6° 50' and 12° 30' W. Its seaboard extends from the Shehar river in the N.W., to the San Pedro in the Gulf of Guinea, 500 m., including the colony of Cape Palmas, with an average breadth of 40 m. Area 20,000 sq. m. Pop. 200,000, of whom 6,343 were free blacks from the United States, and the remainder aborigines, or captives released from slavers. The country has been purchased from time to time by the American Colonization Society; and its climate has improved greatly by a systematic drainage, and clearance of woods. Palm oil, to the value of 150,000 dollars, was shipped from it in 1847; camwood, ivory, gold-dust, coffee, indigo, ginger, arrow-root, and hides, are other principal products. Cocoa and sugar thrive, and it is expected that cotton will soon become an extensive export. Mandingo horses and native cattle are used for draught, but much of the camwood exported is brought 200 m. from the interior on men's backs. It is estimated that 2,000,000 inhabitants of the interior now obtain supplies of European goods from this republic and Cape Palmas. In 1847, 62 foreign vessels visited the coast, and carried away merchandise to the value of 600,000 dollars. Liberia, formerly a dependency of the United States, was recognised as an independent republic in July 1848. Government vested in a president, vice-president, and a senate of 6 members, and house of representatives of 28 members, elected by all possessors of a real estate to the value of 30 dollars. Annual revenue about 20,000 dollars, derived from sale of land and duties on spirits. About 50,000 of the pop. are said to use the English language, and children are sent from the surrounding countries, 400 or 500 m. distant, to attend the schools of this state, which also supports two public journals. In 1843, there were 16 schools, with an attendance of 667 pupils; and it had 23 places of worship, with 1,474 communicants. On the whole, the establishment of Liberia is a most successful experiment for the colonization of Western Africa. The seaport and cap. Monrovia, has a pop. of 2,000. The other chief settlements are Beziey, Edina, and Cresson, the latter situated on a fine bay, and affording abundant supplies of wood and water.

Lincoln, Notts, Leicester, Hunts, Bucks, and Bedford. Episcopal rev. 4,000*l*. Lincoln was at the Conquest, and long after, one of the richest ports of England, the Witham at that period being navigable for large vessels. It suffered greatly during the baronial wars, and also in the civil war, when its cathedral was occupied as a barrack.

LINCOLNSHIRE, a maritime co. of England, extending along its E. coast from the Wash to the Humber, which separates it from Yorkshire; it has E. the North Sea, S. cos. Cambridge, Northampton, and Rutland; and W. Leicester, Notts, and York. Area 2,611 sq. m., or 1,671,040 ac., of which nearly 1,600,000 are said to be cultivated, and about 470,000 are enclosed fen-land. Pop. 407,222. It is naturally divided into 3 districts:—1. the wolds, a low range of hills in the N.E.; 2. the moors, a lower, but more extensive division, running N. and S., and now mostly cultivated; 3. the fens, in the S. and E., a low tract protected from the sea by embankments, which, as the shoaling of the water is very gradual (the tide often running out more than 2 miles), might in places be extended so as to gain vast tracts of new land. Chief rivers, the Trent, Welland, Witham, and Ancholme. Climate in the fens moist, and previous to the extensive drainage now effected, very productive of ague. Soil, mostly a fertile sandy loam, on the moors and wolds; in the fens, deep loam, rich marly clay, or peat. Improvements in agriculture, especially as regards draining, irrigation, and bone manuring, have rendered this one of the most productive English cos. Chief crops, oats, especially on the moors and wolds, wheat, beans, barley, hemp, wood, rape, turnips, and artificial grasses; but the pasture land greatly exceeds the arable in extent. That of the fens is unequalled elsewhere in quality. The cattle, mostly short-horned, attain a great weight. The sheep are also famous for size and for long wool. Many horses are bred; the waste fens support vast flocks of geese, chiefly kept for their feathers, and the waters are the resort of wild ducks. Estates and farms of all sizes. Lincoln is separated into the parts of Lindsey in the N., Kesteven S.W., and Holland S.E., and into 83 hundreds, and 629 par., in the Midland circuit and diocese of Lincoln, besides which city, it contains Boston, Grantham, Stamford, and Great Grimsby. The co. sends 4 members (exclusive of the towns) to H. of C., 2 of which are for the N., and 2 for the S. division. Reg. co. electors (1848) of N. div., 11,598; of S.

St. 2,122. This co. is famous for the number and beauty of its ancient parish churches.

LIVERPOOL, a port and munic. bor. of England, co. Lancaster, hundred W. Derby, on the E. bank of the Mersey estuary, about 4 m. from the Irish Sea, 163 m. N.W. London. Lat. of observatory 53° 24' 48" N., lon. 3° 0' 1" W. Area of borough, comprising, with Liverpool pa., portions of the townships of Kirkdale, Everton, W. Derby, and the extra parochial place of Toxteth Park, 5,000 ac. Pop. (1831) 203,964; (1841) 286,487; (1851) 375,955. Mean temperature of year 50° 8; winter 41° 3; summer 61° 1, Fahr. It extends 5 m. in length, by about 2½ m. at its greatest breadth, over gently rising ground; the highest point within the borough being about 220 feet above the quay wall of the river. Though irregularly laid out, it has many broad, straight, and handsome thoroughfares. Along the shore, there is a line of docks and basins of nearly five miles in extent, having an aggregate water area of 200 acres. Of these 179 acres are wet docks, and 21 acres dry basins, and the quay space exceeds 14 m. in length; and the docks are still in the course of extension northward. Among the largest of the docks are the Brunswick, Queen's, King's, Albert, Salthouse, Canning, George's, Prince's, Waterloo, Victoria, Trafalgar, Clarence, Nelson, Bramley Moore, Wellington, Huskisson, Sandon, Salisbury, Collingwood, and Stanley. The three last are connected with the Leeds and Liverpool Canal, and most of the others have half tide locks and wet basins. The number of ships that entered the port in 1851 was 21,071; aggregate tonnage 3,737,666; dock dues 269,020; custom receipts 8,510,182, after a reduction of 38½ per cent. from the rates of 1836—38 per cent. from those of 1844, on the tonnage dues on East India voyages, or 18 per cent. on the aggregate foreign dues—and again a further reduction in 1848, equal to 40,000. on the gross income. Total value of foreign exports in 1850 amounted to nearly 35,000,000., and the foreign imports 37,404,460. The rapid increase of the commerce of the port is seen by contrasting the extent of dock-room, and the amount of shipping, tonnage, and revenue above stated, with the corresponding items in 1836, when they were as follows:—Area 111 acres, shipping 12,537, tonnage 1,552,466, revenue 183,456. Warehouse room attached to the docks is wanting, the Albert and Stanley docks being not yet the only two that have warehouses attached, and most of the imported goods have to be placed in private warehouses. The London and North Western Railway has a terminus on the high ground of the town at Edge-hills, and from thence three branches through tunnels run, one to the centre of the town for general traffic, and one to the North and South docks respectively for goods. The East Lancashire, the Lancashire and Yorkshire, and the Liverpool and Southport lines join, and have a goods station near the docks in Great Howard Street, and a general station in Tithe-barn Street, near the exchange; and, in connection with them, a high level branch to the docks is now in course of construction, for coaling steam-vessels. Liverpool is supplied with water of excellent quality, to the extent of about 6,000,000 gallons per diem, pumped from wells in the red sandstone, into head reservoirs, from which it is distributed with such pressure that fires are extinguished by jets direct from the mains, without the intervention of fire-engines. Works are in progress for bringing in a large supply of water from the hilly district of Rivington, 26 m. distant, in iron pipes 44 inches in diameter. The sewerage of the town was, until lately, extremely defective, and the mortality of the town was very high. Under a local act obtained in 1844, active measures have been taken to remedy these evils. Sewers are being made in all directions, and houses drained, and the mortality has been greatly diminished.

Among the public buildings is the town hall, erected at a cost of upwards of 110,000*l.* It contains a superb suite of entertainment rooms, the council-hall, and various public offices connected with the management of the municipal business, and the corporate estate. The hall stands on one side of a square, the other three sides of which are formed by the exchange buildings, the lower storey of which is an arcaded walk. The revenue buildings, comprising the excise, post, custom-house, dock, and stamp offices, is a large heavy building, of the Ionic order, covering an area of 6,700 sq. yards. St George's Hall, of the Corinthian order, externally and internally, contains sans courts, and a hall for public meetings, musical entertainments, etc., and also a concert room. There is also a concert hall, called the Philharmonic Hall, of colossal dimensions, and in excellence in the requisites of hearing and seeing, may vie with any building of a similar kind. The principal churches are those of Saints Peter, Catherine, James, Michael, Luke, Philip, and Paul; and St George's, the Scotch kirk, Free churches, United Presbyterian Church, Unitarian, Independent, Baptist, and Wesleyan chapels, and two Jews' synagogues—altogether 109 churches and chapels. A statue has been erected to Field-Marshal the Duke of Wellington. Among the educational establishments are the Liverpool Royal Institution, which has a large library and a museum; the Collegiate, a fine building in the Gothic style; the Mechanics' Institute, a school of medicine, and several schools belonging to the different religious bodies. There are many hospitals, an infirmary, dispensaries, and charitable institutions; four large covered, and two open, public markets for provisions; a fish market and pedlars' market; corn exchange, and tobacco warehouse; public baths on the pier-head, and two other baths and wash-houses in the town for the working classes. The bank of England has a branch here, and next to it is the Liverpool Commercial Bank, besides ten other banks. There are the Exchange, Athenaeum and Lyceum news-rooms; the two latter have extensive libraries attached, and the free public library and museum. Fourteen newspapers are published in Liverpool. The town has sugar refineries, iron and brass foundries, breweries, rope, glass, soda, and alkali works; a manufacture of watches and jewellery; and ship-building is carried on in it to a great extent; but it owes its chief importance to its being a great seat of foreign export and import trade, and the main outlet for the manufactures of Manchester, W. Yorkshire, Staffordshire, and the principal part of the trade of England with Ireland and America. The entrance to the river Mersey is encumbered with shoals, but at high water it may be entered by the largest ships, upwards of 15,000,000*l.* having been expended on the river Mersey in securing safe anchorage and dock accommodation. Nearly all the raw cotton imported into Britain is brought to Liverpool; the imports in 1851 amounted to 6,795,335 cwts. In 1850, 174,187 passengers emigrated from this port (in 658 ships, of 1,500 to 3,000 tons); of these 154,799 were steerage passengers; 106,109 were emigrants to the United States of America. Liverpool is connected by railway with all the great towns of England and Scotland, by canals with the principal towns of England, and by steam packets with Glasgow, Dublin, Cork, Bristol, and the principal ports of America, to which steamships depart. The bor. is divided into 16 wards, and governed by a mayor, a recorder, 16 aldermen, and 48 councillors. The corp. rev. from town dues alone amounted, in 1836, to 49,332*l.* and, in 1849, to 102,590*l.* 15*s.* 3*d.* With this and other sources of income, the council are enabled to meet their ordinary and obligatory expenses, imposed under the municipal act, and from 1836 to 1849 there has been an annual surplus varying from 20,000*l.* to 40,000*l.* The corp. estate is estimated at above 4,000,000*l.* and the debt about 550,000*l.* It has quarter and petty-sessions, courts of record and requests, and is the seat of assizes for the hundred of W. Derby. Its port jurisdiction comprises the whole estuary of the Mersey. Birthplace of Mrs Hemans the poetess. It sends 2 members to House of Commons. Reg. electors (1851) 17,316.

Boat-building is carried on to a considerable extent at Roanne and St Rambert. The dep. has 3 lines of railway connecting the principal towns with Lyon, and it is divided into the arronds. Montbrison, Roanne, and St Etienne.

Loire, a comm. and vill. of France, dep. Rhône, arrond. and 14 m. S. Lyon. Pop. 1,450.

Loire (Haute), a dep. of the S.E. of France, formed of part of the old prov. of Languedoc, and situated between the depts. Loire, Puy-de-Dôme, Cantal, Lozère, and Ardèche; cap. Le Puy. Area 1,920 sq. m. Pop. 304,613. Surface elevated and mountainous, traversed on the E. by the Cevennes, and on the W. by the mountains of Margerides, which unite the Cevennes with the mountains of Auvergne, and on the S. by the Forez mountains. Many of these are volcanic; culminating point, Mont Mexin, in the Cevennes, 5,794 feet. The dep. is entirely situated in the basin of the Loire, by which, and by its affl. the Allier, and numerous smaller streams, it is watered. Climate rigorous in the mountain dists. Soil poor, sterile on the slopes of the mountains. Agriculture in a very backward state; corn and potatoes sufficient for home consumption. Wine is raised in small quantity and of inferior quality. Cattle rearing is an important branch of industry; bees are numerous in some localities, and furnish excellent honey, and silk worms are extensively reared. Chief mineral products, coal, antimony, gypsum, building stone, and potter's clay. Manufs. are unimportant, the chief are lace, silk, ribbons, paper, and leather. From the want of employment, a great portion of the pop. leave the dep. during a considerable part of the year. The dep. is div. into the arronds. Brioude, Le Puy, & T-sengeaux.

Loire-Inférieure, a maritime dep. in the N.W. of France, formed of part of the old prov. Bretagne, situated on the Atlantic Ocean and the Bay of Biscay, between the depts. Morbihan, Ille-et-Vilaine, Mayenne, Maine-et-Loire, and Vendée; cap. Nantes. Area 2,735 sq. m. Pop. 535,664. Surface in general level, traversed by low hills, and mostly situated in the basin of the Loire, and its estuary. Chief rivers, the Loire, Vilaine, Erdre, Brivé, Sèvre-Nantaise, Moine, Maine, Acheneau, and Ognon. The dep. contains numerous lagoons, among which the étang de Grand-Lieu is the largest in France. Climate humid but healthy. Soil generally fertile. Agriculture in an advanced state; chief products, grain and wines, the latter are nearly all pale, and are of second class quality. Cattle are extensively reared, horses excellent, and sheep of good breeds; bees are numerous. Chief mineral products, marine salt, turf, coal, and iron. Nantes is the principal port. The dep. is divided into the arronds. Ancenis, Châteaubriant, Nantes, Palmbeuf, and Savenay.

Loiret, Liger, a river of France, dep. Loiret, rises in 2 springs, 2 m. S.S.E. Orléans, and joins the Loire on the left near Orléans; length 10 m.

Loiret, a dep. of the N.W. of France, forming part of the old prov. Orleansais, situated between the depa. Seine-et-Oise, Eure-et-Loire, Loir-et-Cher, Cher, Nièvre, Yonne, and Seine-et-Marne; cap. Orléans. Area 2,645 sq. m. Pop. 311,433. Surface flat and little elevated. The N. portion is situated in the basin of the Seine, and watered by its afflu., the Loire and Eure, and in the S. it is traversed by the Loire, and watered by its afflu., the Loire, Cosson, and Beuvron. There are several lagoons in the basin of the Loire. Climate mild and healthy, except near the lagoons. Soil rich and fertile N. of the Loire, but poor on the S. of that river. Chief products, grain, wine, saffron, lint, and timber. Apples for cyder are extensively grown. Wine, mostly red and of good quality. Sheep and cattle are numerous and of good breeds; fowls and bees abundant. Mineral products comprise only building stones and potter's clay. There are mineral springs at Segreay and Beaunegey, the former of which has a bath establishment. The important manuf., of which Orleans was formerly the seat, have greatly declined; the chief are cloths and woollen caps, pottery, cotton thread, leather, beet-root sugar, and paper. The dep. is divided into the arrondis. of Gien, Montargis, Orleans, and Pithiviers.

LOIRYON, a comm. and mkt. town of France, dep. Mayenne, on the Oudon, 7 m. W. Laval. P. 1,376.

LORE, a town of Prussian Pomerania, reg. and 24 m. S. Stralsund, on the Peene. Pop. 3,113.

LORE, a comm. and vill. of France, dep. Charente-Inférieure, 15 m. W. N. W. La Rochelle, with a port in the Ile-de-Ré. Pop. 1,206.

LOSA, a city of Spain, prov. and 25 m. W. S. W. Granada, near the Genil, cap. a judicial dist. Pop. 15,065. It has 3 churches, a convent, and 2 hospitals, and manufactures coarse woollens and paper.

LOKERS, a town of Belgium, prov. East Flanders, cap. cant. arrond. and 7 m. N. W. Tournai, on rt. b. of the Druine. Pop. 16,400. It has manufs. of tobacco, linen, and cotton fabrics.

LOKHVITSA, a town of Russia, gov. and 60 m. N. W. Pultava, cap. circ. on the Soula, near here joined by the Lohvitsa. Pop. 6,000.

LOMBARDO-VENEZIAN KINGDOM (Germ. Lombardo-Venetianisches Königreich, Ital. Regno Lombardo Veneto), a political and administrative division of the Austrian empire in Italy, forming 2 governments.—I. Lombardy, divided into the delegs. Milan, Brescia, Cremona, Mantua, Bergamo, Como, Pavia, Lodi, and Sondrio, cap. Milan.—II. Venice, with the delegs. Venice, Verona, Udine, Padua, Vicenza, Treviso, Rovigo, and Belluno. It is composed of a vast plain bounded to the S. W., and situated entirely in the basin of the Adriatic, between lat. 44° 47' 16" and 46° 40' 26" N., lon. 10° 33' and 15° 45' E., bounded E. by the Adriatic and Ilyria, S. by the

Pontifical States, Modena and Parma, S. W. and W. by Piedmont, N. by Switzerland and the Tyrol. Area 17,311 sq. m. Pop. (1854) 5,502,473. The territory is enclosed on the N. by the Rhaetian, Noric, Carnic and Julian Alps, from which several extensive valleys depend. The mountains Euganean and Berio, in the gov. Venice, form 2 masses of little extent, nearly isolated in the plain. The rest of the territory is composed of low plains, which terminate in lagoons, on the shores of the Adriatic. The principal rivers are the Po and its affluents, all of which flow to the Adriatic Sea. Of these 29 are navigable, and many of them are connected by means of canals. The valley of the Po is irrigated and intersected by lakes, rivers, and water-courses, rendering the climate similar to that of the Netherlands, marshy, swampy, and unhealthy. The roads are skirted with mulberry trees, and vines festooned from tree to tree. All the fine lakes of Northern Italy belong wholly, or in part, to the Lombardo-Venetian government, the Lago Maggiore forms its W. boundary. Climate severe in the mountain regions, but none of the mountains rise to the snow line, otherwise it is temperate and healthy, except near the lagoons, and in the vicinity of the rice fields. Mean temperature of year at Milan 53° 2', at Venice 55° 4'. It is often, however, severe in winter, and the lagoons of Venice are sometimes frozen over, rain falls often and copiously in summer and autumn; average annual amount 35 inches, but at Tolmezzo, on the Tagliamento, the average fall is 109 inches. The prevailing winds are N. N. W. and N. E. in the gov. Venice, and E. W., and N. E., in the gov. Milan. The soil, in the plains, composed of rich alluvium, and abounding in marine deposits, is cultivated with great care, and the system of artificial irrigation is the most complete in Europe. The prov. of Lombardy and Venice are the most fertile in the Austrian empire. Principal products, maize, wheat, oats, rye, and barley. The number of cattle (1843) was, in the prov. Milan, 407,800, and in Venice 363,782, in the dreg. Loh the finest Parmesan, and in Milan the best Strachino, cheese is made. Wine is an important product, but its quality is generally inferior. Hemp and flax, of excellent quality, are extensively grown. Minerals comprise copper, iron, lead, arsenic, marble, alabaster, potter's clay, coal, and precious stones. The principal mineral springs are those of Bormio, Massino, and Trescoire, in the gov. Milan, and Albano, Rovere, Recoaro, and PIANO, in the gov. Venice. The principal manufs. are silks, cloths, printed cottons, paper, glass, and pottery ware. The principal seats of commerce are Venice, Milan, Brescia, Bergamo, Padua, and Verona. Commerce is facilitated by means of excellent roads, including those leading over the Splügen and Yalkeine, and by navigation on the lakes, rivers, and canals. The railways in operation are the great line from Milan to Venice E., Milan to Monza and Como N. W., and Verona to Mantua S. W. The population belong chiefly to the Italo-Tuscan family, with a mixture of Germans and Jews. Roman Catholicism is the religion of the state. The chief educational establishments are the universities of Pavia and Padua; 12 colleges (Liceo), 48 gymnasia, and numerous other schools. The royal imperial institute of Milan has sections at Vienna, Padua, and Verona, and there are 24 public libraries in the state. The kingdom is divided into the archbishoprics of Milan and Venice, and 16 bishoprics; it has 67 monasteries and 84 nunneries; and numerous hospitals and charitable institutions. The Lombardo-Venetian Kingdom was formed in 1814, of part of the kingdom of Italy, created by Napoleon I. The congress of Vienna recognised it as a possession of the Austrian empire, and granted to Austria the power of maintaining garrisons in Ferrara and Comacchio, beyond its southern frontier. In consequence of political dissensions, it was in a state of siege from 1848 to 1859.

LOMBARDY, an old div. of Italy, so named from its having long been the chief seat of the Lombards or Langobards. It now forms the W. part of the Lombardo-Venetian kingdom, the E. part of Piedmont, and the duchies of Parma and Modena.

LOMBESSE, a comm. and vill. of France (formerly a town), dep. Turn, arrond. Albi. P. 1,700.

LOMBESSE, a comm. and town of France, dep. Gers, cap. arrond. 19 m. S.E. Auch. Pop. 1,677.

LOMBEX, an isl. of the Malay Archipelago, E. of Flores, between Solor and Pantar. Lat. about 8° 20' S, lon. 123° 40' E. Length N. to S. about 40 m.; greatest breadth 16 miles.

LOMBOK, an isl. of the Malay Archipelago, between lat. 8° 12' and 9° 1' S, lon. 115° 44' and 116° 40' E., separated from Sumbawa, E. by the Strait of Alas, and W. from Bali by the Strait of Lombok. Estimated area 1,480 sq. m. Pop. (1846) 251,000. (?) Two mountain chains extend along the N. and S. coasts, in the former of which is a volcanic peak, 12,379 feet in elevation. Between them is a well watered plain, wholly cultivated for rice, the hill-sides producing coffee and maize. Exports about 20,000 tons of rice annually. The principal port, Ampanam, on its W. coast, is more resorted to than any other in the E. sea (except Singapore), by European shipping and American whalers, for provisions. Other principal towns are Mataram, the cap., and Lalm-Hadje on the E. coast.

LOMELLO, a market town of island Sardinia, Piedmont, div. and 25 m. S.S.E. Novara. P. 2,151.

LOMMATZCH, a town of Saxony, circ. and 21 m. W.N.W. Dresden. Pop. 2,775. It has manufs. of woollens, linens, leather, and tobacco.

LOMME, a comm. and vill. of France, dep. Nord, 3 m. W. Lille. Pop. 1,019. It has linen weaving, and bleaching works.

LOMMEL, a vill. of Belgium, prov. Limbourg, 20 m. N. Hasselt. Pop. 2,230.

LOMMITZ, a mntn. of Hungary. [CARPATHIANS.]

LOMMITZ, several towns of Germany.—I. Bohemia, circ. and 20 m. N. Neu-Bitschow. Pop. 2,000, with extensive trade in linen stuffs.—II. Moravia, circ. and 17 m. N.N.W. Brünn. Pop. 1,600.—III. Prussian Silesia, reg. and 27 m. S S.W. Leignitz. Pop. 1,130. It has manufactures of cotton and linen stuffs.

LOMONA (Lochn), the largest lake of Scotland, between os. Stirling and Dumbarton, 16 m. N.W. Glasgow. Length N. to S. nearly 21 m.; greatest breadth 7 to 8 m.; narrowing to 1 m. at N. end. Area 40 sq. m. Depth from 10 to 60 fathoms. It is studded with 30 islands, some of which are finely wooded, and it is surrounded by mountains and valleys, displaying striking scenes of grandeur and beauty. It receives the Eudrick, Lusa, Fruin, and other streams, and discharges its superfluous waters, at its S. extremity, into the Firth of Clyde, by the river Leven—a name which anciently belonged to the lake itself. Steamers now ply for the accommodation of numerous tourists. [See LOMOND.]

LOMNA, a town of Poland, palatinate Augustow, cap. circ., on the Narw, 72 m. S.W. Suwalki. Pop. 2,300. It is an arsenal and paper mills.

LOMATE-POSSUOLO, a vill. of Lombardy, deleg. and 23 m. W.N.W. Milan. Pop. 2,375.

LOWARO, a town of Lombardy, deleg. and 13 m. E.S.E. Brescia, cap. circ., 24 m. S.W. the Lake Garda. Pop. (1846) 5,660. It is enclosed by walls, defended by a citadel, and is celebrated for the victory of Napoleon I. over the Austrians in 1796.

LOUDA, a vill. of Tuscany, prov. and 17 m. E.N.E. Florence. Pop. 2,000.

LOUDE (La), a comm. and vill. of France, dep. Seine-Inferieure, 12 m. S.W. Rouen. Pop. 1,890.

LOUDEMELLE, a comm. and market town of Belgium, prov. S. Brabant, 11 m. N.W. Brussels, on the railway between Mechlin and Ghent. P. 4,280.

LOUDESBOROUGH, a pa. of England, co. York, E. Riding, 54 m. S.E. Pocklington. Ac. 4,200. P. 293.

LOUDINIERS, a comm. and market town of France, dep. Seine-Inferieure, 7 m. N. Neufchâtel. Pop. 1,000.

LOXDOON, Londonium Augusta, the cap. city of England, and metropolis and seat of government of the British empire; the city-proper, with the major part of the metropolis, being in the co. Middlesex, on the N. bank of the Thames, here crossed by seven bridges; but several extensive quarters are on the S. side of the river, and the whole capital, with its suburbs, occupies parts of the 4 co. of Middlesex, Surrey, Kent, and Essex. Lat. of St Paul's Cathedral 51° 40' 49" N, lon. 0° 8' 48" W. of Greenwich observatory. Mean temperature of year 50° 30, winter 35° 3, summer 62° 8, Fahr. Annual fall of rain 24.4 inches. Subdivisions and pop. as follow:—

	Area in acres.	Pop. 1851	Pop. of area, 1861-60.
London City.	600	187,000	20,200
Windsor (City and Liberty).	2,500	241,011	17,813
Marylebone, Borough.	2,400	250,367	15,000
1 suburb.	4,710	288,773	17,743
Tower Hamlets.	5,908	238,111	21,141
Southwark.	1,500	172,993	9,210
Lambeth.	2,500	261,543	18,964
Total.	21,488	2,007,288	28,028

In addition to the above, the par. of Chelsea, Hampstead, Greenwich, Lewisham, Camberwell, Wandsworth, Clapham, etc., have been included in the bills of mortality; the total pop. in 1851 being 2,362,236. Number of houses 305,933. In middle of 12th century, the pop. of London was 40,000; in 1701 it was 674,000; in 1801, 864,845; in 1821, 1,325,694. The metropolis may be considered to extend from Limehouse on the E. to Kensington on the W., a distance of about 7½ m.; from Islington on the N. to Walworth on the S., upwards of 4 m.; bounded, for the most part, on the E. and N., round to N.W., by the Regent's Canal, S.W. by the Kensington Canal, and S. partially by the Grand Surrey Canal, but beyond these limits are the extensive suburbs of Portland Town, Kentish Town, Holloway, Kingsland, and Hackney (with Victoria Park) on the N., Bow and Poplar on the E., and New Cross, Peckham, Camberwell, Brixton, and Battersea on the S. from nearly all which the lines of road extending into the country are bordered for many miles by terraces and villas. The densely populated area above indicated is traversed S. of its centre from W. to E. by the Thames, which has a tortuous course through it from Chelsea Reach to the Isle of Dogs, considerably more than 3.44ths of the entire pop. residing on its N. side. The more import-and thoroughfares in London (N. of the Thames) run mostly E. and W. Starting from Chapside and the Poultry, in the heart of the city, as a point to which many important routes converge, four lines pass off Eward at the open space bounded by the Mansion House, the Bank of England, and the Royal Exchange,—viz., King William Street, Threadneedle Street, Lombard and Fenchurch Streets, and Cornhill, with its continuation Leadenhall Street; which two latter routes converge at Aldgate, and the united line is continued through Whitechapel and the Mile-end roads to Bow and Stratford. A new street (Cannon Street) has been completed from near London Bridge to St Paul's Cathedral. At the W end of Chapside, two great parallel lines lead off,—viz., that consisting of Newgate and Skinner Streets, Holborn, and Oxford Street, with the road extending thence on the N side of Hyde Park to Bayswater, and the line formed of St Paul's Church-yard, Ludgate Street and Bill, Fleet Street, the Strand, Charing Cross, and Pall Mall, terminating at St James's Palace, and the Green Park. Intermediate to these two, is a line passing from Lincoln's Inn Fields, nearly in the centre of the town, through Great Queen Street, Long Acre, Crutcheffe Street, Little St. Martin's, Piccadilly, Knightsbridge, and along the S. side of Hyde Park, to Kensington. S of the Thames, the principal thoroughfares diverge from the Elephant and Castle, or the Obelisk, those going N mostly unite with others N the river to cross the foregoing lines, and the chief of these crossing lines, S to N, may be thus enumerated:—I Walworth Road, Blackman and High Streets (Borough), London Bridge, King William and Bishopsgate Streets, Shoreditch and the Kingsland Road to Stoke Newington.—II Blackfriars' Road and Bridge, Bridge and Farringdon Streets, thence prolonged by a street lately laid out to Chickwell Sessions-house, and which is to be prolonged direct to Islington.—III Waterloo Road and Bridge, Wellington, Bow Endell, Bloomsbury, Gower, and George Streets, and the Hampstead Road, leading to Camden Town and Hampstead.—IV Westminster Road and Bridge, Parliament Street, Whitehall Place, Regent Street, and Portland Place to the Regent's Park.—V. A waving line over Vauxhall Bridge and Road, through Grosvenor Place, Park Lane, and the Edgeware Road, to Kilburn. Other important lines N of the Thames are St Martin's Grand, with Goswell Street and Road; St John's Street and Road, Gray's Inn Street and Road, Tottenham Court Road, Bond Street, Audley and Baker Streets, Park Street, and Gloucester Place, several of which at the W, or fashionable end of London, form perfectly straight and elegant vistas, full 1½ m. in length. From the city to Kensington Gardens, a semicircular line, consisting of the City, New, and Grand Junction Roads, embraces most part of the metropolis on the N and N W, much in the same way as the boulevards enclose the principal portion of Paris. The S, and especially the E. parts of the metropolis, are meanly or indifferently built, and, setting aside its immensity, a stranger entering London in those directions, is not apt to perceive much difference between its appearance and that of one of the less opulent provincial towns. But W. of Gray's Inn Lane and Temple Bar, the magnitude of the residences, and continuous lines of handsome streets cannot fail to attract observation; and although nearly the whole of London is built of brick, the stucco façades, and classic style of many of the buildings in the newer parts of the town, give the whole a highly imposing character. On every outskirts, particularly around the terminus of the various railways, new quarters are springing up; this is eminently the case in the N. and W. In the reign of George IV. Piccadilly became a suburb, boasting of a good deal of architectural display, but although much building has been still progressing in that direction, opulence seems latterly to have preferred the N. side of Hyde Park, and between the Regent's Park and Bayswater, a very magnificent quarter is now rapidly extending. They mostly contain ornamental lakes, are well planted, and surrounded with fine terraces, and form favourite promenades. The immediate banks of the Thames have little embellishment, being crowded mostly with wharfs and factories, the new Houses of Parliament, Somerset House, the Temple, Custom House, Fishmongers' Hall, the Coal Exchange, and the Tower, are almost the only buildings of interest facing the river. Across the Thames, E to W, are London, Southwark, Blackfriars', Waterloo, Hungerford, or Charing Cross, Westminster, and Vauxhall bridges, and nearly 2 m below the first is the tunnel under its bed. London Bridge, a structure of stone, with 5 arches, and 928 feet in length, was completed in 1831, at a cost of 2,000,000*l*. Waterloo Bridge is a beautiful edifice of 9 arches, 1,242 feet in length, at a cost of 1,150,000*l*. Blackfriars' and Westminster Bridges are also of stone, the latter about to be removed, and replaced by a new bridge, southwark is of iron, Vauxhall of iron and stone, and Hungerford is a suspension bridge, and a bridge of the same kind is in course of erection at Chelsea. London is distinguished by the great number and beauty of its squares, of which the best known are Belgrave, Laton, Grosvenor, Berkeley, St James', Trafalgar, Hanover, Cavendish, and Portman squares in the W, and Russell, Bedford, Bloomsbury, Tavistock, Euston, and Brunswick squares, with Lincoln's Inn Fields towards the centre and E part of the town. All of these are ornamented with gardens in their centre, except Trafalgar square (late Charing Cross), which is an open area containing two fountains, the Nelson column and statue, 162 feet in height, and the equestrian statues of Charles I. and George IV. Principal statues are those of Canning, Pitt, Fox, the great Duke of Bedford, the Duke of York (on the column in St James's Park), Duke of Kent, equestrian figures of George III. and of some other kings (mostly in obscure situations), and those of the Duke of Wellington, opposite the Exchange, and on the arch of George IV at the entrance to Hyde Park. The most conspicuous public buildings of London are: St Paul's Cathedral, in the W part of the city, a noble structure of Grecian architecture, 510 feet in length, 250 feet in breadth, with a dome, 370 feet in height, and completed by Sir C. Wren, between 1675 and 1710, at a cost of 747,574*l*. The S. of London comprises the co. Middlesex, with most part of the cos. Essex and Hert. Income 11,700*l*. The Mansion House, Bank, Royal Exchange, General Post Office, India, Custom, and South Sea houses, Mint, Chancery and Bartholomew's hospitals, the Goldsmiths' hall, Guildhall, Compter and Newgate prisons, the Temple, and the Monument, are in the City, in which are also an extraordinary number of churches, with spires and towers of very various architecture. Immediately W.ward is Westminster, separated from the city by Temple Bar and comprising Hyde, St James', and the Green parks; Westminster Abbey, the Houses of Parliament, Courts of Law, Westminster hospital, and Session-house, all clustered together near Westminster bridge; the public offices in Downing Street and Whitehall, the Horse-guards and Admiralty; Northumberland house, St Martin's church, and the National Gallery, surrounding Trafalgar Square; Italian opera houses, and the other principal theatres; Somerset House and King's College, St James' and Buckingham Palaces, the principal club-houses, and most of the residences of the nobility. Marylebone, forming the N.W. section of the metropolis, has an opulent population, and regular streets, several churches, the Colosseum, Middlesex hospital, and terminus of the Great Western Railway. Finsbury comprises the quarters N. of the City, and of a part of Westminster, and contains the British Museum, Lincoln's Inn and the New Law Courts, Foundling and St Luke's hospitals, University college and hospital, the terminus of the North-Western Railway, the reservoir of the New River Company, Clerkenwell and Pentonville prisons, Gray's Inn, the London Institution, St Bartholomew's Hospital, Charter-house, St John's gate, and Smithfield market, which latter will shortly be removed to the new market in course of erection in Copenhagen Fields, near the Caledonian Road, and will be connected by branch lines with railways which pass near. The new market covers a large area, and is fitted up with every convenience for up-putting of stock, and facility for conducting business. Large shambles have been fitted up on the most scientific principles. The Tower-hamlets, in the E. and N.E., comprise the Tower, St Katherine's, and London docks, the London hospital, numerous charitable institutions, and the terminus of the Eastern Counties Railway. Southwark contains St Saviour's church, Guy's and St Thomas' hospitals, the Queen's bench prison, and the united termini of South and South-Eastern Railways; and in Lambeth are the palace of the Archbishop of Canterbury, Bethlehem hospital for lunatics, a Roman Catholic cathedral, the Surrey, Victoria, and Astley's theatres, and the terminus of the South-Western Railway. It is impossible here to enumerate even the principal of the charitable endowments and schools in the metropolis. London has, since 1837, been the seat of a university, with which numerous colleges throughout the country are in connection. Among its principal scientific associations are the Royal Society, the royal antiquarian, the Linnean, horticultural, medical and chirurgical, geological, geographical, astronomical, Asiatic, zoological, and ethnological societies, with the statistical society, and Royal and London institutions. At the present time, 10 newspapers are published in London daily; and at a late period, it was estimated that 80 newspapers were issued at different weekly periods, and upwards of 320 other periodicals at various intervals. All kinds of manufactures are pursued in London; the principal are those of silk, beer, spirits, soap, vinegar, refined sugar, chemical articles, cutlery, machinery, watches, and jewellery, coaches, furniture, and shipping. The silk manufacture is confined to Spitalfields; watchmaking is chiefly conducted in Clerkenwell. The cutlery made in the metropolis is of the finest quality. Many of the breweries are of enormous extent. Shipbuilding is conducted chiefly E. of London Bridge, along Wapping and Rotherhithe to Deptford and Blackwall. The following passage from a periodical of 1843, although its estimates must be in general considered as only an approximation to the truth, will serve to impress the reader with some idea of the vastness of this great emporium:—

"London, the largest and richest city in the world, occupies a surface of 32 square miles, thickly planted with houses, mostly three, four, and five stories high. It contains 300 churches and chapels of the Establishment; 364 Dissenters' chapels, 22 foreign chapels, 250 public schools, 1,500 private schools, 180 hospitals, 166 almshouses, besides 250 other institutions, 550 public offices, 14 prisons, 22 theatres, 24 markets; consumes annually 110,000 bullocks, 778,000 sheep, 280,000 lambs, 250,000 calves, and 270,000 pigs; 11,000 tons of butter, 18,000 tons of cheese, 10,000,000 gallons of milk, 1,000,000 quarters of wheat or 64,000,000 of quarter loaves, 65,000 pipes of wine, 2,000,000 gallons of spirits, and 2,000,000 barrels of porter and ale; employs 16,502 shoemakers, 14,353 tailors, 2,391 blacksmiths, 2,013 whitesmiths, 5,030 house painters, 1,076 fish dealers, 2,662 hatters and hosiers, 13,208 carpenters, 6,822 bricklayers, etc., 3,416 cabinetmakers, 1,005 wheelwrights, 2,180 sawyers, 2,807 jewellers, 1,172 old-clothesmen (chiefly Jews), 4,386 printers (viz. 3,628 compositors, 700 pressmen), 1,893 stationers, 2,613 watch and clock-makers, 4,227 grocers, 1,430 milkmen, 5,635 bakers, 2,091 barbers, 1,440 brokers, 4,322 butchers, 1,680 cheesemongers, 1,082 chemists, 4,199 clothiers and linen-drillers, 2,167 coach-makers, 1,367 coal merchants, 2,193 coopers, 1,381 dyers, 2,319 plumbers, 917 pastry-cooks, 869 saddlers, 1,246 tinner, 808 tobacconists, 1,470 turners, 556 undertakers. (The above are all males above 20 years of age). 10,000 private families of fashion, etc. About 77,000 establishments of trade and industry, 4,400 public houses, 330 hotels, 470 beer-shops, 960 spirit and wine shops. London Docks cover 90 acres; 14 tobacco warehouses, 14 acres; and the wine and spirit vaults are capable of containing 61,000 pipes. The two West India Docks cover 295 acres, and one East India dock 32 acres; St Katherine's Docks cover 24 acres; the Surrey Docks, on the opposite side, are also very large. There are generally about 5,000 vessels and 3,090 boats on the river, employing 8,000 watermen and 4,000 labourers. The houses in the city form upwards of 60 m. of streets. In the seven metropolitan districts, the number of houses rated at 10*l.* is 231,736, and the house rental of London is probably 7,000,000*l.* or 8,000,000*l.*"

The metropolis is supplied with water by 8 companies, the total supply per day to 191,066 houses being estimated at upwards of 30,700,000 gallons, of which quantity, the New River Company supplies nearly half. Twelve gas companies furnish an aggregate of 1,480,000,000 cubic feet of gas annually, by the consumption of 180,000 tons of coal. In 1851, the imports of coal amounted to 3,286,542 tons, employing 10,000 ships. The port of London extends to Gravesend, 30 miles down the river, and from Limehouse to London Bridge, there is a continuous crowd of mercantile shipping. Its foreign exports in 1850 amounted to 14,137,577*l.*, and its imports are valued at upwards of 80,000,000*l.* annually. Total reg. shipping of port in 1850, 2,735 sailing ships, and 318 steamers, of an aggregate burden of 667,297 tons. Gross customs revenue 1849, was 11,070,178*l.* About 5,000,000 tons of shipping enter the port annually, of which 1,600,000 are from foreign ports, 500,000 from the colonies, and 3,000,000 are coasters. Around London several new parishes have been laid out for the recreation of the inhabitants. An act of Parliament has been obtained prohibiting burial within the metropolis, and new cemeteries are being formed in the suburbs. It is also proposed to remove several of the present churches, and to build others where the population is extending. The city of London is divided into 26 wards, and governed by the Lord Mayor, who has an official income of 8,000*l.* a year, and by the courts of aldermen and of common council, elected by the freemen. Annual corp. rev. is estimated at nearly 150,000*l.* Assessed taxes of city (1847) 88,710*l.*; of the city and whole metropolis born 850,687*l.*, excluding the Tower Hamlets, of which there is no published return. Of the 16 members sent to the House of Commons by the metropolis, 4 are returned by the city.—Triebstunam or the town of the Triebstunam, was probably the name of London at the time of the Roman invasion. It was afterwards walled in, and became a Roman colony and place of great trade. It was the cap. of the East Saxons, and made a bishop's see in 610. In 804 it became the cap. of England under Alfred the Great, and obtained its first charter from William the Conqueror. In 1664, the plague cut off 100,000 of the inhabitants, and the great fire, in 1666, consumed 5-6ths of the city. [FISHERY, LAMHET, MARYLEBONE, SOUTHWARK, TOWER HAMLETS, and WESTMINSTER.]

MADAGASCAR, an island of the Indian Ocean, separated from the S.E. coast of Africa by the channel of Mozambique, situated between lat.

11° 57' (C. Amber) and 25° 38' (C. St Mary) S., lon. 48° 20' (C. St Vincent) and 50° 31' (C. East) E. Length 1,080 m., greatest breadth 350 m. Pop. variously estimated at from 1,800,000 to 4,000,000. Surface flat on the coasts, but in the interior elevated mountains divide the island into numerous well watered valleys. Climate hot on the coasts, temperate in the interior, but everywhere unfavourable to Europeans. Soil generally very fertile, with rich pasturage and magnificent forests. Chief vegetable productions, medicinal plants, pepper, cotton, indigo, sugar cane, tobacco, rice, manioc. Domestic animals comprise oxen, sheep, swine, dogs, and cats. Silk worms are reared. Honey and wax are procured in great abundance in the woods, which swarm with bees. The mountains supply gold, silver, copper, lead, and iron, which last is mined to a considerable extent. Coal is used in smelting, and there is a coal mine near the cap., and another near Diego-Suarez. The inhabitants manu. iron utensils, and work in gold and silver articles, as chains, necklaces, and ear-rings. Carpets are made at Tananarivo, and cotton goods are extensively manufactured. Sugar mills have been lately introduced, and at Mahala 3,000 men are employed in the manu. of sugar. Trade is conducted chiefly with the Portuguese settlers on the E. coast of Africa. Exports, native produce. Imports, linen, ribbons, glass, and Spanish piastres. The inhabitants consist of Malagashes, Ovas, and other tribes of Papuan, Malay, Arabian, and Kafir origin. The island is divided into 28 provs., each having a chief subject to one of the Ovas, with the title of king, whose cap. Tananarivo, is near the centre of the island. Tananarivo is the chief commercial town. Fetichism is the prevailing superstition. European missionaries were protected by one of the late kings, when civilization made considerable progress, but in 1835 Christianity was prohibited, and in 1845 all Europeans were expelled. This island was known to the Arabs in the 13th century, under the name of Zaledj; it was first called Madagascar by Marco Polo. In 1642 the French settled on it, and called it "Île Dauphine;" they have since made several attempts to colonize it, but without success.

MADEIRA ISLAND, a group in the Atlantic Ocean, belonging to Portugal, from the S.W. coast of which they are distant 660 m. S.W. They consist of the islands Madeira and Porto Santo, and the i-lets called the Desertas, situated between lat. 32° 23' 15" and 33° 7' 50" N., lon. 16° 13' 30" and 16° 38' W. The largest isl., Madeira, is 81 m. long, and 13 m. broad. Pop. (1833) 120,277; British pop. in 1850, 317. Cap. Funchal. It consists of a mass of volcanic rocks, which in Pico Ruivo rise to 6,056 feet in elevation. From the central mass steep ridges extend to the coast, where they form precipices of 1,000 to 2,000 feet in height. The only plains are a small portion of the W. coast, and the table land of Paul da Serra in the interior. The roads are very steep, and unfit for carriages. Oxen are the only beasts of draught, and ponies are used in travelling. Climate variable, exposed to the hot dry wind called lesta by the Portuguese. Rain days 73; mean annual fall 21 inches. Madeira has long been resorted to by invalids afflicted by pulmonary diseases, but it appears that consumption is by no means rare among the natives. The soil, which on the S. side extends 2½ m. inland, is well watered, and extremely productive. The vine is the chief article of cultivation, it grows to an elevation of 2,000 feet, but the best wine is produced at an elevation of less than 1,000 feet. Sugar, once extensively cultivated, is now neglected. Coffee is grown of superior quality, and the arrow root is excellent. The orange, banana, and guava, are abundant. Wheat, maize, beans, and barley, are cultivated to a small extent, but quite insufficient for home consumption. The culture of the potato, formerly the chief support of the pop. of the villa, and remote districts, has aided to the existing distress, and the condition of the lower orders is that of squalid poverty. Begging is universal. Madeira was settled by the Portuguese in 1431. [FINCHAL.]

MADEIRA or CAYARI, a river of South America, Brazil, is formed by the junction of the Beni and Vamorié, lat. 10° 25' S., lon. 65° W., whence it flows N.E., receiving a vast number of affluents, and joins the Amazon in lat. 3° 30' S., lon. 58° W. Total course estimated at 1,800 miles.

MADRAS (PRESIDENCY or), one of the three divisions of British India, named after the city which is the seat of its government. It is bounded N. by the Bombay presid., the Nizam and Berar territories, and the petty native states on the frontiers of Bengal; E. and S.E. by the Bay of Bengal; S. by the Indian Ocean; and S.W. and W. by the Arabian Sea. It lies between lat. 8° 4' and 20° 18' N., lon. 74° 0' and 83° 16' E. Greatest length, from Frigahy to Cape Comorin, 953 m.; extreme breadth, from the city of Madras to Golamelly, 460 m. The sea coast extends to 1,737 m., but it is almost destitute of safe anchorage or harbours for large ships. The following table gives the districts, area, and population:—

Vizagapatnam.	7,000	1,104,573

Of the foregoing, the first 17 are regulated districts, being under the ordinary system of rules and management, and the other 8 non-regulation districts. Travancore and Cochin native states, and the hill zemindaries adjoining the British district of Vizagapatnam, are under the political and military management of the presidency. Mysore, though under the political management of the government of India, for military purposes, is subject to the jurisdiction of the Madras presidency, being nearly surrounded by its territories. Area of the foregoing states 51,802 sq. m. Territory of British districts, 135,680 sq. m.; ditto of French, 185 sq. m., making the total area of this country 187,667 sq. m. The sea coast is in some parts bold and rocky, especially from Golamelly to Mangalore, a length of 150 m. From Mangalore to Mount Dilly (a headland rising out of the sea), distance 65 m., the shore is low and well wooded. From Mount Dilly to Cape Comorin, 325 m. in length, except a few spots, the shore is low and sandy, or muddy, abounding with shallow inlets, called backwaters, which stretch inland for a considerable distance. N.E. of Cape Comorin for 166 m., the coast is little frequented, in consequence of the obstruction to navigation by Adam's Bridge. The Coromandel coast has a N.E. direction of 297 m., with a slight elevation and sandy formation, and shallow water along the shore. From Goudgam to Vizagapatnam, length 269 m., it is called the Golconda coast. In the S.W. part are the estuaries of the branches of the Kistnah and Godavery, and during prolonged gales from the N.E., accompanied with land-floods, the coast is extensively inundated, and great damage ensues. In lat. 17° 15' N., the Golconda coast terminates, and the Orissa commences. From this point the shore becomes bold and rocky, with low rugged hills at intervals, and retains this aspect for 243 m., the whole extent of the coast. Vizagapatnam, the S. most part of Orissa frequented by shipping, is marked by a bluff headland called the Dolphin's Nose. On the Golconda coast the hills are connected in some places with the ranges of the Eastern Ghats, and as the range reaches the S.W., its distance from the shore gradually increases, the space between being the tract called the Circars and Carnatic. About 56 m. N.W. Madras city, the Eastern Ghats join the range which crosses the peninsula in a S.W. direction, and unite in the vicinity of the Neilgherries with the Western Ghats, which reach Cape Comorin on one side, and to the N. frontier of the presidency on the other, and comprise the level part of the territories of Travancore and Cochin, and almost all the British districts of Malabar and North and South Canara. Principal rivers, the Godavery, Kistnah, and the Cauvery, which, with their numerous tributaries, flow E. or S.E. direct across S. India, to the Bay of Bengal. From the table land other torrents descend, and in the rainy season drain the level country and fall into the Bay of Bengal, the chief of which are the Northern Penna, Southern Penna, and the Palari, all of which have their sources in Mysore territory. On the W. side of the presidency, the rivers flowing into the Arabian Sea receive streams from the Western Ghats. Near the mountains, these streams have channels of great declivity, but towards the sea they expand into shallow lakes (backwaters) communicating with the sea. Principal products comprise rice, maize, millet, oil-seeds, pulse, cotton, tobacco, pepper, sugar, fruits, and excellent timber for ship-building. The manu. are muslins, fancy goods, and iron, the latter being important. Minerals of the presidency comprise iron, copper, silver, lead, and coal. Climate is varied more by the different elevations of the surface, and other local circumstances, than by latitude. On the summits of the Nellore Mountains, elevation above the sea 6,000 to 7,000 feet, the climate is mild. On the Canara and Malabar coasts the heat is tempered by the sea breezes, and by the proximity of the W. Ghats. In the beginning of summer the heat is excessive on the E. coast. In some parts of the W. Ghats rain falls for nine months of the year, the quantity being enormous. Amongst the public works for the improvement of this presidency are the annicuts on the Godavary, Kistnah, and Canavery rivers, for the purpose of irrigation. An extensive system of railways is projected and being carried out, uniting Bombay via Poona and Bellary, with Madras, whilst further E., a line between Madras and Ponany will unite the E. and W. coasts of the peninsula. In addition, several lines of electric telegraph are being erected, connecting the other presidency towns with Madras. Military force of all arms (exclusive of a considerable number of her Majesty's troops), 81,707 men. Total value of exports in 1851, 15,669,765 rupees, and the imports was 8,978,931 rupees. Total public revenue in 1851, 5,087,328*l.*, of which the land rent yielded 3,615,969*l.* The majority of the population are Brahmans, but in some parts Mussulmans. Zoology comprises the elephant, tiger, panther, leopard, bear, hyena, wolf, nygaur, buffalo, gyal, and monkeys. Birds are numerous. Venomous reptiles abound; the box constrictor here attains to great size, and the rivers and marshes swarm with alligators.

MADRAS, a maritime city of British India, cap. above presid., on the Coromandel coast; lat. of observatory 13° 4' 1" N., lon. 80° 14' E. Area of its dist. 30 sq. m., pop. estimated at 720,000. It is badly situated for a commercial cap., on a surf-beaten shore, where rafts (catamarans) are obliged to be used to land passengers and all kinds of merchandises. It stands on level ground, has no striking appearance from the sea, but is generally well built and handsome. Fort George, the citadel, is on the beach, surrounded by an esplanade, on the N. side of which is the "black town," partly enclosed by a brick wall, and containing many good native houses, with European warehouses, the custom-house, board of trade, and court-house; on the W. and S. sides of the fort, separated from the town by a river, is Choultry Plain, on which are some extensive suburbs, consisting mostly of detached houses, occupied by Europeans; and here are also the residences of the governor and the Carnatic nabob, St. George's cathedral, and a handsome stone mosque. Other chief buildings are several Episcopal and Armenian churches, an elegant Scotch church, Independent, Wesleyan, and Unitarian chapels, the cenotaph to the Marquis of Cornwallis, &c. Madras is an episcopal see, having a Bishop of the Church of England; and there is also a Roman Catholic Bishop. It has a medical college, Bishop Corrie's grammar schools, various other schools, high school, and several literary associations. There are nine newspapers published in Madras, some of these being published thrice a week, others twice, and some once, besides several periodicals. At the suburb, St. Thomas, on the shore, about 3 m. S. from the fort, are a Roman Catholic cathedral and some chapels, this being the place where most of the inhabitants of Portuguese descent reside. Madras is the seat of all the chief government offices for the presid., of the supreme court, boards of revenue, admiralty, education, &c.; and though having less foreign trade than the caps. of the other presid., its commerce is still considerable, as it is the chief emporium of the Coromandel coast, and trades direct with Great Britain and the other European countries, the United States, Ceylon, and S.E. Asia. Madras bank, chartered, and in a measure under the control of the government, besides branch banks, a savings' bank, and life, fire, and shipping insurance companies. The site of the city formed the first territorial acquisition by the British in India, permission to erect a fort here having been obtained in 1639. A railway west by Arcot to Yellore, 81 m., was opened in 1857.

MADRID-DE-DIOS ARCHIEPISCOPO, W. Patagonia, is between lat. 50° and 51° S., and lon. 75° W., separated from the mainland, and from Hanover and Chatham islands by Concepcion Straits, and consists of several mountainous and rocky islands.

MADRID, a city of Southern Europe, cap. of the kingdom of Spain, and of the prov. Madrid, near the centre of the peninsula, on l. b. of the Manzanares, and in the middle of the table land of Castile, 1,995 feet above the sea. Lat. 40° 24' 57" N., lon. 3° 41' 51" W. Mean temperature of year 58°·2, winter 45°·3, summer 76°·4, Fahr. Pop. (1857) 301,666. The city is surrounded by a brick wall with 15 gates, the finest of which are those of Alcala, San Vicente, and Toledo. It is situated in an arid plain, and its provisions have to be brought from a distance; it is subject to extreme changes of temperature. Chief public edifices, the royal palace, with extensive gardens, on l. b. of the Manzanares, and the summer palace, Casa real del Campo, on the opposite side of the river; palace of Duana-reiro, founded by Philip iv.; palace of the Duke of Alba, museum, and post office. In 1850, a bronze statue of the Queen of Spain was placed in the Plaza del Oriente, E. of the royal palace. It has no cathedral nor university, but a college with a faculty of theology; schools of medicine and veterinary surgery; a house of education for orphans of the military, normal school, school of engineers, military college, conservatories of arts and trades, and of music; a national library of 130,000 vols., and numerous MSS.; an astronomical observatory, botanic garden, the academy of Spain, and several other academies, museums, and cabinets; numerous hospitals, and benevolent institutions. Madrid has 4 theatres, but the chief place of resort is the bull ring, an amphitheatre near the Alcala gate, capable of containing 12,000 spectators. The chief industrial establishments are royal manufs. of porcelain and carpets; and manufs. of paper, jewellery, silks, and hats, none of which are important. It is the birthplace of many kings of Spain, and many eminent men, among whom are Alonso de Ercilla, Lopes de Vega, Calderon de la Barca, Nufiez, and the brothers Velasquez. Madrid occupies the site of the anc. Mantua Carpetanorum, called Majoretinus in the middle ages. Its importance only commenced when made cap. of Spain by Philip II. It was held by the French from 1808 to 1813, and here Napoleon I. placed his brother Joseph on the throne of Spain.

MAIRWARRA (Real of the Mairs), a mountainous tract of India, in Rajpootana, consisting of a number of parallel ridges extending in a direction from N.E. to S.W., and constituting that portion of the Aravalli range which lies between Komalner and Ajmere, a space 90 m. long, and from 6 to 20 m. broad. Lat. of N.E. extremity 26° 10' N., lon. 74° 30' E. Lat. of S.W. do. 25° 25' N., lon. 73° 50' E. Area (British Mairwarra) 282 sq. m. Pop. 37,715; ditto (Oodeypoor) 305 sq. m.; ditto (Joudpore) 67 sq. m. There are numerous isolated eminences in the valleys between the ridges. Elevation of the bottom of these valleys 1,600 feet above the sea; do. of their summits towards the S.W. 1,000 additional. The rocks are of primary formation, and are supposed to contain antimony, copper, and lead, besides iron of good quality, and unlimited in quantity, several iron furnaces having been erected, and many more are in course of construction. In 1815 it was ceded to the British by Doulut Rao Scindia, but the states of Oodeypoor and Joudpore having claimed a portion of it, and their claims being admitted, the impossibility of conducting the government in a satisfactory manner led to the whole being put under the superintendence of the British, the other two states paying a sum towards the expense of a local mi-fila, and they in turn receiving credit for the net revenue. Before this time the natives were a fierce and warlike race, living by plunder and murder, the little cultivation that was practised being carried on by the old men and boys; and the women, being considered as slaves, tended their scanty herds of goats. Female infanticide was very prevalent, but since it came under British rule this has been abolished. The people subdued, are rapidly advancing in prosperity. A land revenue settlement has been effected for a term of 20 years, and the revenue collections exhibit a steady increase. Chief town, Nya Nugga, which is walled, and seems to become a place of considerable trade.

MALABAR, a dist. of British India, presid. Madras. It is bounded on the N. by Canara and Coast, E. by Mysore and Coimbatore, S. by Cochin, and W. by the North Indian Ocean, between lat. 19° 18' and 15° 18' N., lon. 75° 18' and 76° 55' E. Area, 6,060 sq. m. Pop. 1,514,909. Sea coast line is 113 m. long, abounding in shallow havens. The shores are generally low, barren, and sandy. Principal rivers are the Ponnai, Calicut, Cheraul, Mahé, and Biliptam, which are navigated by small boats, carrying to the coast the products of the interior. On the S.E. frontier is the Choukatt, a lake 20 m. long and 8 m. broad, having several islands, coves, and inlets. The district is traversed by the range of the Western Ghats. Iron ore is found in the hills, and gold dust in many of the streams descending from the Ghats. The mountains are covered with teak trees of superior quality for ship-building, and so great has been the demand, that the woods were being exhausted, and extensive tracts of waste land have been planted by order of the government. Chief products comprise pepper, cardamoms, cocoa-nuts, rice, ginger, coffee, sugar, tobacco, cotton, castor-oil plant, and fruits. Climate on the sea coast warm and equable, the thermometer ranging from 68° to 84°, and the mean temperature 78°, Fahr. Average annual fall of rain 120 inches. Prevalent diseases are intermittent fevers, dropsy, rheumatism, diarrhoea, leprosy, and cutaneous complaints, chiefly caused by unwholesome food and filthiness, from the same causes cholera has often been severe. The zoology comprises elephants, tigers, leopards, bears, apes, pythons, and wolves, several kinds of birds, reptiles, and snakes, and the sea and inlets swarm with fish of excellent quality. Principal places, Cochin, Cannanore, Ponnai, and Tellicherry. The Malayala, which is a different dialect of the Malabar language, prevails over the district. The population consists of Hindoos, Mussulmans, Christians of different denominations, and Jews. The Hindoos are divided into several castes, the highest in dignity of whom are Brahmins, called Namburis, the reputed aboriginal proprietors of the soil, the chief of whom, before the establishment of British rule, affected to consider himself superior to the sovereign of Malabar, but had only power over members of his own caste. The Puttar caste, more numerous than the Namburis, consider their dignity enhanced by the fewness of their numbers, and restrict their younger sons from marrying. Both of these castes burn their dead. The Nairs, who rank next to Brahmins, are a numerous and influential caste, and long held the chief power. This tribe is distinguished by strange customs. They have no marriage ceremony; the female, on attaining maturity, forms any connection according to her inclination, and her children have no claim upon their father, but become the heirs of their mother's brothers. The Nairs are of the military class, and always carry with them an unsheathed sword. If a Nair is touched by a Nar (the next caste) or a slave, he is defiled, and must immediately wash his body, but before the British rule, they at once slew the unfortunate individual who came in contact with them. This tribe is composed of thirty distinct classes, many of whom now devote themselves to the arts of peace. The Tiars are next in rank, and cultivate the ground. Before the establishment of British supremacy, slaves were a numerous and degraded class, but slavery is now abolished, and measures are adopted for securing the contemplated advantages of the act, by providing employment for the emancipated, and education for their children. The native Mussulmans are both traders and farmers; the former of whom are peaceable, but the latter, especially in the interior, are fierce and bigoted ruffians, and fanatical outbreaks are common. Malabar was annexed to the British dominions at the downfall of Tippon Saib.

MALABAR POINT, India, the S.W. extremity of the island of Bombay, in lat. 18° 58' N., lon. 73° 51' E. It has a residency for the use of the governor.

Estimated area 1,000 sq. m. Pop. 44,021. Surface undulating; hills wooded; valleys swampy, but climate is salubrious, thermometer ranging from 72° to 85°, Fahr. Soil war; the coast fertile; the interior is not so, and Nanning is chiefly valuable for its tin mines. Principal products besides tin, are rice, jagkery, sago, pepper, rattans, timber, cocoa nut, a few nutmegs and cloves, gums, ivory, gold dust and poultry. Malacca has some export trade in gold dust, tin, balachang, hides, poultry, pepper, rattans, lace, aloe-wood, ebony, ivory, and Chinese hardwares; and it imports earthenware, opium, iron, rice, British and Indian manufactured goods, salt, and colonial produce, the commerce of the Straits has, however, become chiefly monopolised by Singapore. The town, said to have been founded in 1252, was taken by the Portuguese in 1511, by the Dutch in 1641, and by the English in 1795. It was again held by the Dutch from 1818 to 1825, when, with its territory, they exchanged it with the British for Banca, in Sumatra. The settlement, previously a dependency of the Bengal presid., was separated therefrom in 1861, and the governor of Prince of Wales' Island, Singapore, and Malacca, was empowered to exercise within the three settlements the powers of administration which were formerly entrusted to the government of Bengal, subject only to the government of India.

MALACCA, a town of India, situated on both sides of the Malacca river, near its mouth, 130 m. N.W. Singapore. Pop. 12,120. The country, as far as lat. 6° S., comprising the states Ligor and Kedah, is claimed by Siam; S. of which it is subdivided among many small native states—the principal being Perak, Johore, Pahang, Kelantan, Tringganu, and Rumbow, besides the British territories Malacca, Naning, and prov. Wellesley. Its centre is traversed throughout by a mountain chain, rising from 2,000 to 4,000 feet in height, but decreasing on proceeding to the S., where however, the detached Mt. Ophir is estimated to rise to 4,330 feet in elevation. Surface well watered, and fine timber, with bamboo, areca sagu, caoutchouc, and an abundance of valuable resins, gums, drugs, with nutmegs, cloves, cinnamon, tobacco, coffee, sugar, cotton, indigo, are produced, with ivory, horns, and in 1848, 2,400 tons of tin, and, as estimated 20,000 ounces of gold annually. Rice and other grains are not raised in sufficient quantity for the home demand, and are imported from Bengal and Sumatra. Trade is principally with the British and Dutch settlements in the E., and with Siam, China, and the Malay Archipelago. The pop. consists principally of Siamese and Malays. Principal towns, Malacca, Kedah, Selangore, Johore, Patani, and Pahang. [ASIATIC ARCHIPELAGO.]

MALTA, Melita (?), an island of the Mediterranean, dependent on Britain, 62 m. S.S.W. the S. point of Sicily. Length 17 m., greatest breadth 8½ m. Area 98 sq. m. Pop. (1857) including Gozo and Comino, 125,496. Cap. Valletta, on N.E. side, in lat. 35° 53' 8" N., lon. 14° 31' 9" E. Shape nearly oval; coast indented with numerous bays. Surface naturally a bare calcareous rock, containing numerous grottoes, and abounding in fossil remains. Surface undulating, highest hills 560 feet above the sea. Its stone is extensively exported for building, chiefly to the Levant. Soil artificial, and only 8 to 10 inches deep. It is cultivated with great care, and yields abundant crops. Chief products, cotton, wheat, barley, oats, and all the European vegetables. The fruits of Malta, of which the orange and fig are the principal, may be compared to those of tropical climates for excellence, and the garden flowers are most odoriferous. The honey of Malta is highly valued, and fish abound on the coasts, yet the pop. is so dense (more than 7 times that of England in proportion to space) that the produce is not more than 1-3d of that required for consumption. Horses small but active. The climate of Malta resembles that of Africa more than Europe. Mean temperature in Sept. 70°·5; in Jan. 57° Fahr. Variations of temperature are sudden, and storms from the N.E., the gurgals, violent and destructive, during a N. wind the air is cold and clear, but during the prevalence of the strocco (S.E. wind) in spring and autumn, the temperature rises to 88° Fahr., and its effects are most debilitating. Frost and snow are unknown; ice is largely imported from Sicily. Manufactures are confined to coarse cottons, cabinet work, and jewellery. Government vested in a governor and council of seven persons, appointed by the British crown. Established religion Roman Catholic, but there are 4,500 Protestants. The island was taken from the French by the British in 1800, to whom it was ceded at the peace of 1815. [CITRA VECCHIA—VALLETTA.]

MALWA or CENTRAL INDIA, a table-land, elevated from 1,500 to 2,500 feet above the sea, is bounded on the W. by the Aravalli range of mountains, S. by the Vindhya chain, E. Bundelcund, and N.E. by the valley of the Ganges. It was at one time a powerful kingdom, having declared itself independent of Delhi towards the close of the fourteenth century. Its first king was Dilwar Ghorri, and it preserved its independence for 180 years, when it was subjugated by Akbar, and annexed to the imperial dominions. Mandoo, the cap. city, the area of the walls of which have been estimated at from 22 to 37 m. in circumference, is now in ruins. It was next overrun by the Maharrattas. Here originated the associations of Pindaries, leagued together for the purposes of rapine and plunder. These parties were a source of great annoyance to the adjacent countries until stopped by the Marquis of Hastings. The Shoels, a despised race, were organized into a military corps, and have shown themselves worthy of the trust reposed in them.

The expense of this corps is borne mutually by the British, Malabar, Scindia, Dhar, and Jabooas.

MAN (ISLE OF), Manx or Menavia, an island in the Irish Sea, 33 m. W. England, 30 m. E. Ireland, 16 m. S. Scotland, and 56 m. N. Wales. Lat. of Calif. of Man, on which there is a lighthouse, 54° 3' N., lon. 4° 49' W. Length, N.E. to S.W., 30 m., greatest breadth 12 m. Area 280 sq. m. or 179,200 ac. Pop. 52,387. A mountain range crosses the isl. from S.W. to N.E. Numerous streams water the valleys. Greywacke and schistose strata prevalent, with limestone, marl, and peat moss. Copper, zinc, and lead ores, are found, with some seams of coal. Soil sandy in some places, but fertile in others. Climate mild, and winter open, though rain and gales of wind are frequent. Mean summer temperature 58°, winter 41°·7, annual mean 45° 8, Fahr. Sea-level mountain rises to 2,000 feet above the sea. About 100,000 acres are in tillage or cultivable, and 56,000 do. unproductive. It yields a surplus of wheat and barley over the home demand. Flax, oats, potatoes, and clover are the crops next in importance. An excellent small breed of horses is reared; cattle and small sheep are tolerably numerous. Farms range from 10 to 200 ac., and rents vary from 3s. to 8l. an ac. The herring and other fisheries off the coasts are of considerable importance. In 1833, 79 vessels were engaged in the herring fishing, and the total take of herrings was 39,832 barrels. During the same period the take of cod and ling was 15,000 fish. The island has limestone, slate, and marble quarries, and some mining operations. The women weave woollen, linen, and cotton fabrics; there are some bleaching works, but few manufacturing establishments. Principal exports, corn, potatoes, eggs, limestone, ore, fish, limes, and sailcloth; imports, spirits, wine, colonial products, and manufactured goods. Reg. shipping (1848) 318 vessels, aggregate burden 9,436 tons. Gross customs revenue (1846) 20,661l., net do. 12,514l. This island, originally peopled by the Manx (Menavia), a tribe of the Celtic race, was alternately possessed by the Scotch under the Lord of the Isles, and English. It was latterly held as a feudal sovereignty by the Stanleys, and afterwards by the dukes of Athol, from whom it was purchased for the British crown in 1806; and finally in 1826, certain remaining privileges were ceded by the duke on receiving an award of 418,000l. Government vested in the British sovereign, or the lieutenant of the crown, a council of the bishops and principal functionaries, and the House of Keys, a body of 24 proprietors of estates, who possess the legislative power. The island has its own laws, and two supreme judges, called deemsters. Common law courts are held in the 6 shreadings into which the island is divided, and appeals lie from their decisions successively to the House of Keys, the governor, and the sovereign in council. The isl. is subdivided into 21 par. Established religion that of the Church of England, under the bishop of Sodor and Man, who has a seat (without a vote) in the British House of Peers. Each pa. has its endowed school, in which English is taught as well as the native Manx, a dialect of the Celtic. The island was a great station of the Druids, and contains numerous vestiges of their relics. Principal towns, Castletown, the cap., Peel, Douglas, and Ramsey.

MANCHESTER, a city, pari, and munic bor, and pa of England, co Lancaster, hundred Salford, the town on the Irwell, across which it communicates by 6 bridges with the adjacent bor, Salford, on the W, and conjointly with which it is the chief seat of the cotton manufacture in South Britain, 161 m N N W London. Area of parish, including the borough of Salford, 34,200 ac. Pop, m 1801, 110,398, m 1851, 401,321, of whom 318,218 were in the bor of Manchester, and 85,108 in that of Salford. The town stands in a plain, and consists, with Salford, of a dense mass of buildings, extending about 2 m from E to W, by somewhat less from N to S, and covering about 3,000 acres. The Irk and Medlock rivers join the Irwell close to the town, and with it are extensively made use of to impel machinery. The town is irregularly laid out, and comprises at least 800 streets. Principal thoroughfares are Market Street, Piccadilly, and the London Road, Oldham and Great Ancoo Streets, Quay, Peter, Bond, and Morley Streets, and the Oxford and Chester Roads. Many of the newer public ways and open spaces are handsome, such as Portland Place, Grosvenor Square, Mosley Street, Ardwick Green, and Salford Crescent, and between the London and Oxford Roads is Victoria Park, occupying 140 acres. The exchange, in the market place, is a large semicircular building, adorned with Doric pillars. The town hall, of Ionic architecture, contains a noble public room. The corn exchange, royal infirmary, and lunatic asylum, atheneum, royal institution, news room, union club house, natural history society's hall, concert hall, assembly rooms, Salford and Chorlton town halls, asylums for the blind and for deaf-mutes, a royal and some other theatres, the barracks, Victoria bridge, and the numerous mills and warehouses. The collegiate church (now erected into a cathedral), was founded in the 16th century. The see includes nearly all the county Lancaster, bishop's revenue 4,600l a year. Trinity church, at Salford, St Luke's, Cheetham, and St George's, Hulme, are the only other churches demanding especial notice. There are Roman Catholic, Independent, Baptist, Swedenborgian, Unitarian, and a great number of Wesleyan, besides other chapels, most of which have charity schools attached to them. The grammar school, founded in 1520, has a revenue of upwards of 4,000l a year, and 16 exhibitions of 60l a year to the universities, 16 scholarships at Brasenose college, Oxford, others at Cambridge, and additional privileges for its pupils at those seats of learning. Cheetham college, or blue-coat school, has 80 scholars, a library of 25,000 vols., and a museum. Manchester new college, removed from York in 1840, is the principal Unitarian college in England, and is in connection with the university of London. The royal school of medicine, Lancashire independent college, the royal Lancasterian school, which educates 1,400 children, and the Jubilee school for 40 girls, are among the chief public institutions. Scientific establishments are very numerous, and comprise the royal institution, literary and philosophical, statistical, geological, prehistorical, architectural, botanical, and natural history societies, mechanics' institutes, a school of design, and the Victoria gallery. Charitable institutions are also numerous, among them are the infirmary, fever, lying-in, eye, and lock hospitals. It has a branch of the bank of England, 5 joint-stock banks, and 5 weekly newspapers. A statue has been erected to Field-Marshal the late Duke of Wellington. Markets, Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday. The proximity of an abundance of coal, the improvements introduced into spinning and weaving machinery by Hargreaves, Arkwright, Hargreaves, and Crompton, and the application of steam power, have raised Manchester to its eminence of monopolizing two-thirds of the cotton manufacture of Great Britain. Its manufs. are mostly conducted in large mills or factories. In 1853, there were in operation 233 factories, worked by steam power to the amount of 8,135 horses, and employing 42,264 persons. Woollen fabrics, machinery, hats, paper, ropes, twine, pins, and numerous other goods are made in large quantities; and there are many bleaching and chemical works, and breweries. Manchester communicates by railway with all parts of the kingdom. The munic. bor. is divided into 15 wards, and governed by a mayor, recorder, 15 aldermen, and 48 councillors. It has courts of quarter-sessions, record, and requests, and a court-baron held every Wednesday three weeks; and, independent of Salford, it sends two members to House of Commons. Reg. electors (1848) 12,836. Under the Romans, a station termed Mancunium, was erected on a part of its site. Among its eminent natives may be noticed the celebrated Duke of Bridgewater, the chemists Dalton and Henry, and Sir R. Peel, the father of the late premier.

MARNE, a dep. of France, in the N.E., formed of part of the old prov. of Champagne, between the depts. Aisne, Seine-et-Marne, Aube, Haute-Marne, Meuse, and Ardennes. Area 2,214 sq. m. Pop. 373,902. Chief rivers, the Marne and the Seine. A great part of the dep. is comprised in the dist. formerly called Champagne-Pouilleuse. Its sandy plains, formerly maked, have been lately planted with Scotch pines. Grain is raised more than required for consumption. The vine forms the principal produce of the dep.; the best wines are those of Reims and Epernay. Chief minerals are mill-stones. Principal industry, manufs. of woollens and bonnets. The dep. is divided into the arronds. Châlons, Epernay, Reims, Ste. Menesould, and Vitry-le-François.

MARNE (HAUTE), a dep. of France in the N.E., formed of part of the old prov. Champagne, between the depts. Meuse, Marne, Aube, Côte-d'Or, H.-Sâone, and Vosges. Area 2,483 sq. m. Pop. 268,398. Chief rivers, the Marne, which, as well as the Meuse and Aube, rises in the dep. It is traversed in the E. and S. by the mountains which separate the Meuse and Rhône, united by the plateau of Langres in the N.E. Grain is raised more than sufficient for consumption. The dep. has some of the most important iron mines in France. The wine is of good quality, and timber furnishes the principal article of export. Chief industry, mining and forging of iron, cutlery, cotton-spinning, and weaving. The dep. is divided into the arronds. Chaumont, Langres, and Vassy.

MAROCCO or MOROCCO (Arab. Maghrib-ul-Arab, "the Extreme West") ancient Mauritania, a country of N.W. Africa, between lat. 28° and 36° N., lon. 0° 40' and 11° 40' W., having E. and S.E. the Desert, N.E. Algeria, W. the Atlantic, and N. the Mediterranean Sea. Area estimated at 290,000 sq. m., and pop. at 8,540,000, of whom about 3,550,000 are Moors, 3,750,000 Berbers and Shellocks, 740,000 Bedouins, and 339,500 Jews. Surface mountainous, covered with ramifications of Mount Atlas, but comprising many fine plains and valleys. Principal rivers, the Mahala, flowing into the Mediterranean; the Sebou, Morbeja, Tensift, and Susa, entering the Atlantic; and the Draha, beyond the Atlas. Climate healthy. Temperature seldom beyond 85°, Fahr. Soil in the valleys celebrated in antiquity for its great fertility; and yielding, in some places, three crops of corn in one year; but so little is agriculture understood, that large crops of corn are sometimes suffered to remain unreaped, and at other times many of the inhabitants die of famine. Principal crops, wheat, maize, millet, and barley, dates, grapes, olives, sugar-cane, cotton, tobacco, the fruits of South Europe, cork, and henna. Timber for building is not generally abundant, and is imported from Spain. The grass lands are rich, and feed a fine race of horses, the exportation of which is prohibited; besides large numbers of sheep, goats, oxen, and mules. Camels and asses are the principal beasts of burden. Mineral products comprise iron, copper, and antimony. The domestic manufs. comprise woollen and cotton fabrics. Leather is made in large quantities in most of the towns; red caps, silk fabrics, good saddlery, carpets, chip-baskets and earthenwares, are among the chief articles manufeatured. A trade with the Levant is carried on by the Mecca and other caravans, and by feluccas coasting along the shores of Barbary; there is also a communication by caravans, with Timbuctoo and other places in Central Africa, where the Moroccan traders exchange salt, dates, tobacco, cloth, caps, girdles, and daggers, for gold dust, ivory, rhinoceros' horns, assafetida, ostrich feathers, and slaves. Exports to Europe, mostly to Leghorn, Marseille, and the Spanish ports, consist of wax, hides, skins, olive oil, gums, wool, dates, honey, indigo, shawls, carpets, etc. Government is more despotic than in most Mohammedan states. The empire consists of the kingdom Morocco, Fez, and the territories Sus, Draha, and Tafilet; and is subdivided into 28 provs. Principal cities and towns, Morocco, Fez, Mequinez, Rabat, Salloo, Tarudant, Titnan, Tessa, Mogadore, and Tangier, which, with other caps. of provs., are governed by military prefects. The towns are chiefly inhabited by Moors and Jews, which latter conduct the larger mercantile transactions; the Beibers and Shellocks form the bulk of the agricultural pop.; and the Arabs generally lead a wandering life on the plains, living in tents, and subsisting on the produce of their herds and flocks. Arts and science are at a low ebb; though, in most of the cities and towns are Mohammedan colleges, the principal of which is at Fez. The standing army amounts in time of peace to 15,000 or 20,000, in war to 80,000 or 100,000, mostly Negro slaves. Navy, once formidable, is now insignificant. [Fr.]

MAROCRO (Arab. Marakka), the cap. city of the empire Morocco, is situated in a fertile plain, near the river Tensift, 125 m. E. Mogadore. Lat. 31° 37' 20" N, lon. 7° 36' W. Pop. estimated at 80,000. It is enclosed by a wall 6 m. in circumference, in the interior of which are many large fields and open spaces strewed with ruins. The city is ill built and filthy; most of its houses are constructed of only earth and lime, and those of a more substantial kind, together with its extensive aqueducts, are chiefly in decay. Principal edifices, the emperor's palace, separately enclosed by walls, and occupying, with its gardens, a space 3 miles in circumference; numerous mosques, one of which has a tower 223 feet in height; a bazaar, and an hospital for 1,500 patients. The city has 11 entrance gates. The streets are crossed by numerous arches, and walls, and the several quarters are separated in a similar manner: that belonging to the Jews is 1½ m. in circuit. Outside of the city are extensive cemeteries, and a quarter especially appropriated to lepers. Principal manufactures are of leather and embroidery, and the chief export trade is in these articles and in salt. Morocco was founded in 1073.

the island Sicily, on its W. coast, intend. and 16 m. S.S.W. Trapani. Pop. 21,000. It is enclosed by bastioned walls, and has a cathedral, several convents and abbeys, a gymnasium, cavalry barracks, and a curious vibrating bell-tower. Its ancient port was filled up in 1580 by Don John of Austria, to prevent its becoming useful to corsairs; and the new port, about 1 m. S., bounded by a mole, is adapted only for small vessels. The principal importance of Marsala is due to its wine trade, which has grown up within the present century. The district is estimated to yield annually about 30,000 pipes of wine, of which 2-3ds are exported. Marsala also exports corn, cattle, oil, salt, and soda, in small quantities.—Lilybæum was long the cap. of the Carthaginian dominions in Sicily, but few of its vestiges remain.

Mean temp. of year 57°.5, winter 49°, summer 74°.3, Fahr. It is composed of an old and a new town, the former on heights, with numerous crooked streets; the latter, which comprises two-thirds of its extent, has wide and straight streets. Marseille has few public buildings of architectural importance, except the hôtel de Ville; its hazzetto is very large. The harbour is the most commercial in France, and capable of containing 1,200 vessels; its entrance, which admits only one vessel at a time, is defended by two hills, surmounted by fort St Jean and fort St Nicolas, and the road is defended by the fortified islands, Châteaue d'If, Pomègue, and Ratannean. It has a tribunal of commerce, a national academy of sciences, letters, and arts, an academy of medicine, and many other learned societies; a national college, with a library of 51,000 vols.; a school of hydrography, an astronomical observatory, a botanic garden, many benevolent institutions, several museums, and a mint. There are numerous fountains in the old and new town, but the supply of water has long been very deficient; to remedy this, a canal has recently been cut from the Durance. Marseille has manufs. of all kinds, the chief are soap, chemical products, bonnets, shoes, perfumery, olive oil and liqueurs. It has also tanneries, sugar, sulphur, and salt refineries, and manufs. of tobacco. Its commerce in the wines and fruits of the south, cork and anachovies, extends to all parts of the world. It communicates by railways with Arles, Avignon, Nîmes, and Lyon. It is the birthplace of the astronomer Pytheas, the preacher Mascaron, and the sculptor Puget. Marseille, founded by the Phœaciens a.c. 600, served as a refuge for them from the vengeance of Cyrus. It soon became the entrepôt for all the surrounding countries, founded many colonies, was long celebrated for the cultivation of letters and arts, preserved its liberty under the Romans, and often acted as an independent republic. Louis XI. united it to the crown of France in 1481. It suffered severe ravages from the plague in 1720.

Climate healthy; mean temperature of year (Port Louis) 78° 7, winter 70°, summer 81° 8, Fahr. The island is situated in the hurricane region of the Indian Ocean, and is subject to devastating storms. Surface well watered, and soil rich in the valleys, producing wheat, maize, yams, and manioc, but principally sugar, which, since 1848, has, however, greatly failed from an insect attacking the canes. In 1846, 33,651 persons were employed on sugar estates, of whom about 5,000 were cooly emigrants from India; and the crop of sugar in 1847 was estimated at upwards of 65,000 tons. In the year 1846-7, the total exports to Great Britain, the Cape and Australian colonies, British India, and Bourbon, were valued at 1,568,312*l.*; and the imports, consisting of corn and provisions, cordage, British cotton manufs., India piece goods, haberdashery, iron, honey, cattle, silks, wines and spirits, and tobacco, amounted to 1,234,000. In 1842, 108 ships, aggregate burden 28,650 tons, entered Britain from the Mauritius; and 54 do., burden 16,397 tons, cleared out of British ports for the same destination. In 1843, 123 vessels, aggregate burden 12,411 tons, belonged to the colony. The government, which extends over several groups of islands in the vicinity, is vested in a governor, legislative and executive councils, and the orders of the sovereign in council. Public revenue (1845) 295,610*l.*, expenditure 217,920*l.* The island is subdivided into 10 districts. Principal towns, Port Louis and Mahébourg. It was discovered by the Portuguese in 1505, but was named in honour of Prince Maurice by the Dutch, who took it in 1598. It is the scene of St Pierre's tale of "Paul and Virginia." There is a packet communication monthly between the island and Ceylon.

MEDITERRANEAN, Mare Internum, an inland sea, enclosed by Asia on the E., Africa on the S., and Europe on the N., and communicating with the Atlantic by the Strait of Gibraltar on the W., situated between lat. 30° 20' and 43° N., lon. 6° W. and 37° 30' E. Area 1,149,287 sq. m. Within this space is included the Tyrrhenian, Ionian, and Adriatic Seas, and the Sea of the Grecian Archipelago. The Sea of Marmora, the Black Sea, and the Sea of Azov which communicate with it by the strait of the Dardanelles, are considered as separate seas. The principal rivers which flow to the Mediterranean are the Ebro, Rhone, Arno, and the Tiber, in Europe; and the Nile in Africa. The principal islands are Sicily (which divides the Mediterranean into an E. and W. portion), Cyprus, Crete, Malta, and the Ionian islands in the E., and Sardinia, Corsica, and the Balearic Islands in the W. The most important gulfs are Toranto in Italy, Lepanto in Greece, Syrtis and Cabes in Barbary, in the E. portion; and Valencia in Spain, Lion in France, Genoa in Italy, and Tunis in Africa, in the W. The winds of this sea are variable; the tides are little felt and very irregular, but it has been erroneously termed a "tideless sea." Fish is abundant in the Mediterranean, especially tunny, anchovies, pilchards, and mackerel, and the finest coral, sponge, and ambergris are procured. The Mediterranean was called by the Hebrews "the Great Sea." The Phœnicians are the first people known to have extended their commerce along its coasts; the Greeks afterwards disputed it with them. After the destruction of Carthage, the Romans were sole masters of its shores; in the middle ages, the Venetians monopolized its commerce, and at present, Great Britain, by the possession of

Gibraltar, Malta, and the Ionian islands, possesses the greatest influence on its destinies. [ADRIATIC AND IONIAN SEA.]

MEXICAN CONFEDERATION, a federal republic of North America, between lat. 16° and 32° N., lon. 92° and 117° W., having N. the United States' territories of California, New Mexico, and Texas, E. the Gulf of Mexico and Caribbean Sea, S.E. the Confederation of Central America, S. and W. the Pacific and Gulf of California. Estimated area 634,140 square miles. Pop. (1859) 7,206,000. Of the total pop. 1,100,000 are whites, 4,000,000 Indians, 6,000 Negroes, and the remainder are zambos, mulattoes, mestizos, quadroons, and quinteroons. The following states and departments form the Confederation:—Chiapas, Chichuahua, Coahuila Durango, Guanajuato, Guerrero, Mexico, Michoacan, New Leon, Oaxaca, La Puebla, Queretaro, San Luis Potosi, Tabasco, Tamaulipas, Tehuantepec, Vera Cruz, Yucatan, Aguas Calientes, Zacatecas, and Tlaxcala. Territories, Lower California, Colima, and Tlaxcala; and the Federal District. The great mountain chain that enters the Confederation from Central America, diverges, on passing Northward, into two arms, enclosing the plateau of Anahuac, from 6,000 to 8,000 feet in elevation, out of which rise the volcanoes Popocatepetl, Orizaba, etc. Has numerous lakes on this table-land, the chief being that of Chapala-Coahuila, especially the E. low and very unhealthy. Mean temperature of the coasts between the 15th and 20th parallels, is 76°, whilst the elevated plains within the same limits have a temperature of 64° Fahr. Principal rivers, the Nueces, Tigris, Tampico, and Alvarado, flowing E.ward; and the Bolsas, Rio Grande de Santiago, Culmacan, and Yaque, entering the Pacific; but all are much inferior in size to the Rio Bravo del Norte, which forms all the N.E. frontier. Soil extremely fertile, and products are in great variety, comprising maize, manioc, most European grains and fruits, yams, peppers, cocoa, vanilla, sugar, cotton, coffee, and other productions of tropical climates. Tobacco is a government monopoly, and raised only in a small dist. near Orizaba. Mexico is rich in minerals, having mines of gold, silver, quicksilver, copper, lead, tin, zinc, and antimony. Total gold and silver coinage of the Mexican mints from the year 1835 to 1850, 3,667,328,851 dollars, or nearly 8,500,000 dollars yearly. From 1st June 1848 to 30th June 1849, the gold coinage was 1,351,416 dollars; silver 37,003,989 dollars; total of gold and silver 28,355,405 dollars. Manufactures estimated at 80,000,000 or 90,000,000 dollars annually. In 1850, there were 72 cotton factories, besides hand-machines for the manufacture of bed-coverings; 6 woollen factories, 70 hand-machines for the manufacture of silk; besides delft ware and glass works, paper mills, sugar refineries, and distilleries. In 1850, the imports from the United Kingdom comprised 21,994,000 yards of plain and printed calicoes, 310,324 lbs. of cotton twist, and silk and linen goods valued at 270,322. In 1849, the imports from the United States were valued at 2,204,000 dollars, and the exports from Mexico to the United States were valued at 1,640,905 dollars. Principal ports, Vera Cruz, Tampico, Matamoros, and Monterey, on the Gulf of Mexico; and San Blas, Acapulco,

Mexican, and Guaymas, on the Pacific and Gulf of California. A railway has been constructed from Vera Cruz to San Juan, and a line of telegraph wires communicate between Vera Cruz and Mexico. The established religion is Roman Catholic, and the ecclesiastical establishment consists of an archbishop and 11 bishops. The 11 dioceses contain 184 prebends, and the total parishes is 1,229, with 3,223 ecclesiastics. There are 146 monasteries, 59 nunneries, and 8 colleges of the Propaganda. Total annual revenue of the church estimated at from 18,000,000 to 20,000,000 dollars. Education is in a backward condition, but lately several primary and private schools have been opened. Besides these, there are several seminaries sustained and directed by the clergy, national colleges, and a school of mining, a school of medicine, and a military school. There are 64 literary and political periodicals published in the republic. Mexican public libraries are rich in books, MSS., and instruments for the study of the sciences. The Mexican government is representative, popular, and federal. The president is elected for four years, and is ineligible for the next succeeding four years. Legislative power is vested in a general congress, consisting of a senate and chamber of deputies. The deputies are elected by the people for two years—one for every 50,000 of the population, and one for every fraction over 25,000. The present number is 144. Each state, and the federal district, elects two senators, and a number equal to all the states is elected by the senate, supreme court, and deputies, conjointly. There are now 66 senators, one-third of whom retire every two years. The judicial power resides in the supreme court of justice, and in circuit and district courts. In 1851, the regular army consisted of 13,912 men of all arms, and a militia of 60,000 men enrolled. Public revenue estimated at $4,400,000 dollars annually; expenditure 12,525,936 dollars; deficiency 4,075,936 dollars. National debt 131,524,242 dollars. In 1820, Mexico dissolved its connection with Spain, and proclaimed itself an independent constitutional monarchy, and offered the crown to a prince of Spain, which proposal was rejected by the Spanish Cortes. The Mexicans then resolved to carry out their scheme of independence, and in 1822 elected their general and president, Don Augustine Iturbide, Emperor of Mexico, under the title of Augustine I. The new emperor being averse to a constitutional government, the principal officers rose in rebellion, demanded the re-opening of the Cortes, forced the emperor to abdicate and leave the country, in 1823. The attempt to establish a constitutional monarchy having failed, the next attempt was that of a federal republic, which, after much opposition, was carried out in 1824, General Guadalupe Victoria being elected president. The republic abolished the distinctions of caste and slavery. For the next ten years the country was in a most unsettled state, being under military rule, until 1835, when Santa Anna, a successful general, changed the federal into a central republic. The state of Texas now declared itself independent of Mexico, and enforced that independence by the defeat of the Mexican army. Ten years afterwards Texas was joined to the United States. Then followed the war between the United States and Mexico, which resulted with the latter (in 1848), yielding up to the former, New Mexico, Upper California, and those portions of Tamaulipas, Chihuahua, and Coahuila, in all above 850,000 sq. m., which lie E. of the Rio-Grande-del-Norte. From 1841 until 1844, the country was under a dictator, but in the latter year the government again reverted to a central republic, which it continued to be until 1846, when it again became a federal republic. In 1846, Yucatan declared itself independent, but has again rejoined the Mexican Confederation. In 1853, in consequence of the president assuming unlawful prerogatives, causing internal dissension, and calling for the interference of the United States, order has been restored, and a treaty entered into between the two republics, by which the United States has secured a portion of the valley of Masilla, and in return Mexico is to receive 15,000,000 dollars, and a guarantee against the incursions of adventurers from the United States. By this acquisition, the United States has secured dominion in the Pacific, and, by forming a railway through this valley, could unite the Pacific with the Atlantic. The fauna comprise the grizzly bear, bison, tapir, jaguar, cougar or puma, ocelot, tiger-cat, besides monkeys, alligators, rattlesnakes, birds of rich plumage, and on the coasts seals and whales. Horses wild and tame, oxen and sheep, are plentiful.

Mexico, a state of the Mexican Confederation, having S. Guerrero, and on other sides the states Michoacan, Queretaro, Vera Cruz, and La Puebla. Area 19,235 sq. m. Pop. (1850) 978,697. Surface in the N. belongs to the Anahuac plateau. Principal rivers, the Balsas, Lerma, and Montezuma. Products very various. Cattle rearing is neglected, but mining industry is important; here are some rich silver mines, including those of Tasco and Tehuillotepec, and quarries of marble, alabaster, obsidian, etc. It has some manufactures of cotton fabrics. Chief cities Texcaco, the cap., Toluca, Tenancingo, Lerma, and Zimapan. The city of Mexico is in the separate federal dist. of the Confederation.

Mexico, Tenochtitlan, the cap. city of the Mexican Confederation, federal dist., in a noble plain, 1,700 sq. m. in extent, enclosed by mountains, containing many fine lakes, and 7,471 feet above the sea. Lat. 19° 25' 7" N., long. 99° 5' 0" W. Estimated pop. (1850) 220,000. (?) When taken by Cortez in 1521, it occupied several islands in the Lake Texcaco, and although still having the same site, it is now, owing to various causes, 2½ m. distant from the lake. It is encircled by walls, and entered by gates, to which several thoroughfares lead. In the city proper the houses are mostly of stone, built around court-yards, seldom more than one storey in height, flat-roofed, and decorated by painting and mosaic work on the outside; streets regular and well-paved, but neither lighted nor watched, whence robberies and assassinations are frequent; public edifices numerous, substantial, and in good style. The chief place in Mexico is the great square; two sides of which are formed by the cathedral, national palace, museum, and a new market place, the other sides are bordered by arcades in front of the Parian, a bazaar, by the town-hall, exchange, etc. The cathedral, 540 feet in length, by 420 feet in breadth, is of mixed Gothic and Italian architecture, and gorgeously ornamented, having also a high altar with a statue of the Virgin, the dress of which is said to contain, besides other gems, diamonds to the value of 3,000,000 dollars. The national palace comprises the residence of the President, the government offices, mint, the prison, botanic garden, barracks, etc. The university is a fine old monastic building. There are between 50 and 60 churches, Franciscan and Dominican convents, a college of engineers, theatre, bull-ring, and several aqueducts; an academy of arts, public library, manufactures of gold and silver lace, silversmiths' work, coaches, woollen and beaver goods, and a government cigar factory.

MEXICO (New), a territory of the U. S. North America, bounded N by Utah and Kansas, E and S E by Texas, S Mexican Confederation, and W the state of California. Lat 31° 30' to 38° N, lon 103° to 117° W. Area estimated at 210,744 sq m. Pop 61,805. It is traversed by the Rocky Mountains, and watered by the Rio Grande on the E, and the Colorado on the W. About 100 m S E of Santa Fé are several salt lakes. The climate is generally dry, except during the rainy season, from July to October, and the country is very healthy. Agriculture is rudely conducted, and the soil requires irrigation. Maize is the chief grain, wheat is cultivated, and the vine grows well in some localities. The territory is rich in gold, copper, iron, coal, gypsum, and salt. Seven-eighths of the pop are Indians, the others are Creoles and Americans. This country was discovered by the Spaniards in 1591, they colonized it in 1604, and worked the mines, but were driven out by the Indians, in 1680. After a war of ten years, the Spaniards retook the country, and kept it till the independence of Mexico in 1821. It afterwards formed a dep of the Mexican Confederation. In 1846 it was conquered by the Americans, to whom possession was confirmed at the peace of 1848. The territorial government was organized in 1860, cap Santa Fé.

MEXICO (Gulf of), an inland sea, communicating Eward by the Florida Channel with the Atlantic, and by Yucatan Channel with the Caribbean Sea, and on other sides enclosed by the territories of the United States and Mexico. Area 800,000 sq m. Except off Yucatan and Florida, it is free from islands or shoals, and along the coast of Mexico, it has a depth of 100 fathoms, 30 m from the shore. In the winter N winds prevail, but the Gulf is less subject to hurricanes than the Caribbean Sea. The "gulf stream" sets into it at its S E, and out of it at its N E, side.

Here are also several other Roman Catholic churches and monastic establishments, the latter comprising the hôtel Dieu, and asylums of the grey and black sisters. The English church in Grecian style, Scotch and American Protestant churches, general hospital, gov. house, bank, ordnance office, 4 market houses, and the statue of Nelson, on a Doric pillar, are principal structures. During the riots of 1849, the Parliament house and valuable library were burned. Montreal has a college, besides the University of McGill college, endowed by a citizen in 1814, and chartered in 1821; royal grammar, and many other schools, public libraries, and institutions. Several newspapers are printed here. It has a harbour and wharves. In 1850, 294 ships, with an aggregate burden of 51,788 tons entered; and 312, burden 49,942 tons, cleared. Registered, 91 sailing vessels, 3,717 tons; steamers 14, burden 1,289 tons.

Montreal is connected by railway with New York, Boston and Portland. Victoria Bridge, which conveys the line of the Grand Trunk Railway of Canada across the St. Lawrence at Montreal. Was commenced in 1854, and completed in 1859.

It is a tubular bridge, on the same principle as the Britannia bridge of North Wales, but 6,600 feet in length, or more than four times as long, and consists of 25 spans of sufficient height to allow of uninterrupted steam navigation. This magnificent bridge completes the entire chain of railway communication between the Atlantic and the Western States of America. Weight of iron used for the tubes, 10,400 tons, and the stone 205,000 tons. Trade in furs has declined, but it has increasing trade in cast-iron founding, distilling, brewing, and ship-building, with factories for soap, candles, tobacco, hardware, and floor-cloth.

A destructive fire occurred here on the 8th and 9th July 1852, when 1,108 houses were destroyed, of the estimated value of $40,814. It was founded in 1640, and taken from the French in 1760.—

covers a large circular area, and consists of the Kremlo or citadel, surrounded by other quarters, enclosed by walls, beyond which are several suburbs. Since 1813 it has been rebuilt on a regular plan, but is still mostly of wood. The principal edifices were the Kremlo, the ancient residence of the Cæsar, and now replaced by a magnificent structure, the new Kremlo, completed in 1859, comprising several palaces, and ornamented with the finest statuary and sculpture; the orphan hospital, bazaar, cathedral, and the church of the Annunciation, in which the sovereigns of Russia are re-crowned; the church of Ivan Veliki, with a belfry, 269 feet high. The great bell of Moscow, the largest ever founded, 21 feet high, 20 feet in diameter, and weighing 198 tons, 2 cwt., 1 lb., long buried under the soil, was raised and placed on a pedestal in 1836. Moscow is supplied with water by means of an aqueduct 9 miles in length, is the residence of the wealthiest and most ancient noble families, the seat of a section of the senate, of a military governor-general, and of a regency, or council of administration. It has an arsenal, containing arms for 1,000 infantry and 1,000 cavalry, and an immense hall for exercising the troops in wet weather. The university, founded in 1755, had, in 1851, 124 professors and 891 students. Moscow has a public library, an observatory, botanic garden, and numerous scientific and literary institutions. Its manufactures comprise cottons, woollens, and silks, in which steam machinery is employed. In 1841 it had 508 factories, with 40,239 weavers. It has also manufactures of carpets, jewellery, and trinkets. From its central situation, and its communication by water with all the principal cities and ports of the empire, its trade is immense. MOSQUITIA, a maritime tract of Central America, forming the E. portion of the states Honduras and Nicaragua, having on the N. and E. the Caribbean Sea, and S. the river San Juan, which separates it from Costa Rica. Lat. 10° 45' to 16° N., lon. 83° 15' (Cape Gracias a Dios), to 86° W. (Cape Honduras). Its precise limits remain undefined, and the interior is almost wholly unknown. It is inhabited by the Mosquito Indians and numerous other aboriginal tribes, who profess allegiance to a chief who is under British protection, but its existence as a distinct state has not been recognised by Honduras and Nicaragua. Chief towns, Bluefields and San Juan de Nicaragua. By the convention of London, 1850, the river Segovia which enters the Caribbean Sea near Cape Gracias a Dios, was fixed as the boundary with Honduras. Products are cacao, cotton, sugar, indigo, vanilla, and logwood; and the climate is said to be more healthy than that of the West India islands. During 1846, a considerable immigration of Germans took place at the Bluefields river. Government, a monarchy under the protection of Great Britain, and chiefly administered by the British residents. Early in 1848, the Nicaraguans attacked the Mosquito subjects in San Juan, but they were afterwards defeated by a British force at Sarapiquí, and agreed to retire from the territory, by a treaty with the British, March 7, 1848.

MOSAMBIQUE, the principal of the Portuguese colonial possessions, on the mainland of Africa. Its authority extends along the E. coast line opposite Madagascar, between lat. 15° and 26° S., or from Cape Delgado to Delagoa Bay, and stretching to an uncertain distance inland, and over the dome. Inhamban, Sabia, Sofala, and Querimba. Area of the territory actually under the Portuguese estimated at 58,600 sq. m., and pop. at 280,610. Surface level near the coast, but it is mountainous inland. Principal river, the Zambezi. Products comprise wheat, maize, rice, manioc, sugar, coffee, indigo, numerous drugs, and fine timber, ivory, rhinoceros' horns, hippopotamus' teeth, skins, and oil, ambergris, gold dust, coal, and nitre; but recent accounts state, that the Portuguese possessions here "do not supply even enough grain for their own consumption, that much of the land is now neglected and barren, which was once highly cultivated, and that were it not for the industry of the Arab population in the neighbourhood, a periodical famine would inevitably occur." The slave trade is still rife in this region in spite of the measures of the Portuguese authorities, and in fact slaves constitute its chief exports. Mozambique is the residence of the Captain-general. Other chief towns are Inhamban, Sofala, Luabo, Quilimane, and Ibo.

MOZAMBIQUE, a fortified maritime city, and the cap. of the Portuguese possessions in E. Africa, on an island at the entrance of Mesaril Bay, an inlet of the Mozambique Channel, 6½ m. broad, and 6 m. in length, and receiving three small rivers, its entrance being sheltered also by the islands St George and St Jago, which help to bound its harbour. Mozambique island, in lat. 15° 2' S., lon. 40° 48' E., is about 1½ m. in length, low, and of coral formation; on it is the city, capable of being rendered very strong, and containing large barracks, quarters, storehouses and wharfs, a noble governor's residence, a cathedral, and other fine churches, convents, etc., attesting its former importance; but most of its dwellings are mere huts. Each of the two entrances to its harbour is defended by a fort. It is the see of a bishop, and seat of a civil tribunal, subordinate to those of Goa. Its trade with British India formerly considerable, has declined.

MOZAMBIQUE CHANNEL, a strait of the Indian Ocean, between lat. 12° and 25° S., lon. 35° and 49° E., separating Madagascar from the mainland of E. Africa. Length, N. to S., about 1,000 m., breadth 250 m. in its centre, to 600 m. at each outlet. Coasts a good deal broken, but only the inlets of Mozambique and Sofala are of much size. It receives the Zambezi river, and on it are the chief towns of the Mozambique dom. with Mourondava, Boyana, Bembatooka, Narendava, and Passandava. In its N. outlet are the Comoro and Querimba island groups.

Estimated pop. from 70,000 to 100,000. It stands on a hill slope, and is regularly built. Chief edifices are the palaces of the governors and other grandees, the Dutch and Chinese factories, arsenal, several theatres, and upwards of 60 temples, enclosed by gardens, which, with numerous tea-houses, form the favourite public resort of the population. The harbour is about 7 m. in length by 1 m. in breadth, and ships lie securely sheltered in 5 or 6 fathoms water. The Dutch and Chinese traders who resort to it are confined under strict supervision to the strongly fortified and artificial island Desima, off the shore, and only 600 feet in length by 240 feet in breadth. Shops numerous and well supplied; and here are many breweries for rice-beer. Imports sugar, broad cloths, and cotton goods, sandal and sapan woods, buffalo hides, ivory, cloves, tin, and Bengal piece goods. Exports camphor, copper, cotton fabrics, drugs, toys, and silks.

NANKIN or NAN-KING ("Court of the South"), a city, and the ancient cap. of China, cap. prov. Kiang-su, near the Yang-tze-kiang, about 90 m. from its mouth. Lat. 32° 2' N., lon. 118° 48' E. Pop. estimated at 500,000. Its ancient walls can be traced over hill and dale for 35 m., but Nankin has so greatly declined since the transference of the seat of empire to Peking by Kublai-khan in the 13th century, that the modern walls are of much less extent, and the city scarcely occupies 1-8th part of the surface enclosed by them, and it is commanded by hills, especially on the E., and otherwise ill calculated for defence. It is divided into a Chinese and a Tartar town, separated by walls and gates. Principal objects of interest are the famous porcelain tower of 8 stories and 200 feet in height, completed in 1432, and the "tomb of kings," supposed to be of the Ming dynasty (A.D. 1328 to 1621), leading to which is a fine paved road, with an avenue of gigantic armed figures; the governor's palace, and an observatory. It has manufs. of trape, satin, paper, artificial flowers, China or Indian ink, and nankeen, which hence derives its name, but is also made throughout the whole prov. It is the centre of a very extensive trade, and by the great canal, which crosses the Yang-tze-kiang, about 80 m. Eward, it communicates directly with Peking. It is also the place of a grand vicaroy, with authority over the Kiang prov., of a great military depot, and the chief seat of literature in the empire. The British forces remained before it from the 10th to the 26th of August 1842, on which latter day the final treaty between China and England was signed and ratified.

NAN-LING, a mountain chain in China, lat. 26° N., and between lon. 104° and 118° E., separates the basins of the Yang-tze-kiang and Kan-kiang rivers, Nward from that of the Hong-kiang and its affluents Sward, and the Quang provs. from those of Kwi-Choo and Hon-nan.

NANTES, Condivicium, afterwards Nannetes, a comm. and city of France, cap. dep. Loire-Inférieure, 208 m. S.W. Paris. (1866) 108,530. It has a port on several islands in the Loire, at the confluence of the Erdre and Sèvre-Nantaise, and at the head of a railway from Tours. The town, on rt. b. of the Loire, communicates by 12 bridges with the islands, and the suburb Madelaine on l. h. It is a bishop's see, and has a tribunal of commerce, national college, normal school, public library of 45,000 vols., observatory, botanic garden, and a magazine of munitions for the marine. Chief edifices, prefecture, corn exchange, town-hall, and mint. It has manufs. of cottons, muslins, and woollens, cannon foundries, potteries, distilleries, and ship-building yards, and an extensive maritime commerce. The port admits vessels of only 200 tons; larger vessels unload at Paimboeuf. Nantes is the birthplace of Bouguer, the mathematician, and of Fouché. Condivicium was cap. of the Nannetes before the conquest of the Gauls by the Romans. It sustained numerous sieges, and was united to France with the rest of Bretagne. The edict of Nantes was proclaimed here by Henri iv. in 1608. The Vendean army attacked it without success in 1793. The cessat of Nantes connects the Loire and the Vilaine.

[For the insular portion of the kingdom, see SICILY.]

The coasts are high and bold, especially on the W., and greatly indented. Chief capes, Sorrento, Gaeta, Bala, Vateano, Nau, and Leuca. The principal gulf are those of Gaeta, Manfredonia, Salerno, Policastro, St Eufemia, Gioja, Squillace, and Taranto, which surround the two peninsulas of Otranto and Calabria. Surface in general mountainous, but includes extensive valleys, especially the plain of Capitanata and that of Terra di Lavoro (the Compania felice of the Romans). The chain of the Apennines traverses the country nearly throughout its entire length. In the Abruzzi, where it attains its greatest height, it separates into three lateral ranges, which re-unite near Isernia; at Monte Carmo it again divides into two branches, the most elevated of which traverses Calabria. The culminating point of the whole is Monte Corno, 9,691 feet above the sea. The chief isolated mountains are the volcano of Vesuvius, and Monte Gargano near the Adriatic. Soil volcanic. In 1807, 40 towns and villages were destroyed in the centre provs., and 10,000 lives lost. Chief rivers, the Garigliano and Volturno, which flow W. to the Tyrrhenian Sea, the Pescara, Biferno, Candelaro, and Ofanto, flowing E. to the Adriatic; the Bradano, Basento, and Crates. to the Gulf of Taranto; the only large lake is that of Celano or Fucino. Climate divided into three regions; in the lower region the temperature is so mild that vegetation is never interrupted; in the middle region snow occasionally falls, but soon disappears; in the elevated regions of the Abruzzi, cold is sometimes severe and long continued, snow lies on the Monte Corno nine months in the year. Naples is unhealthy in the marshy districts, and during the prevalence of the stirocco from July to September, when the heat is excessive. The flora has, in addition to the plants common to Italy, several tropical products, including cotton, the sugar cane, pistachio, and dates. The wild boar, porcupine, and game of all kinds abound in the forests, and the coasts have always been celebrated for fish. Domestic animals comprise sheep, goats, and pigs; cattle are not numerous; horses are of a small breed, but active; buffaloes pasture in herds in the marshes; sheep are extensively reared in the plains of the Capitanata, and hogs and goats are numerous on the shores of the Adriatic. Agriculture, which is in a very backward state, occupies the greater portion of the population. The chief crops are wheat, maize, cotton, melons, rice, oil, wine, hemp, lint, tobacco, and fruits. The olive is extensively cultivated in Otranto, Bari, and Calabria. The wines of Naples are the best in Italy. The celebrated Lacrima Christi, a red wine, is grown in vineyards on the flanks of Vesuvius, which belong to the crown. Oranges and lemons are grown in the Capitanata, saffron in Basilicata, the Abruzzi and Calabria Ultra; lint and hemp are generally raised to a considerable extent. Manna is an important product of Calabria, and is monopolised by the government. Silk is an important product, especially in the Terra di Lavoro, the Principati, and Calabria. The tunny, anchovy, mullet, and coral fisheries employ many of the inhabitants of the coasts. Manufactures are unimportant, the chief are silks, linens and woollens at Naples, Sorso, and Isola, and paper, glass and cutlery to a small extent. Commerce is mostly concentrated in the cap. Chief exports, olive oil, silk, hemp, wool, wine, grain, macaroni, and coral. Imports colonial and manuf. goods, iron and cutlery. Previous to 1837 the two kingdoms of Naples and Sicily had each a species of provincial council called Consulta, but these have been since united in the Consulta generale common to both kingdoms, as all the other political institutions are. The religion of the state is Roman Catholic; monasteries and nunneries are very numerous. It is calculated that there is one monk for every 250 of the population. Public instruction is entirely in the hands of the priests, and all classes are deplorably ignorant. A constitutional form of government was granted in 1848; and, on procuring liberty of the press, several journals were published, but in the end of 1849 they were entirely suppressed. In 1851 the war footing of the army had a total of 102,932 men, and the naval force 2 ships of the line, 5 frigates, 2 corvettes, 5 brigs, 13 steam-frigates, and 14 small steamers.

NAPLES (Ital. Napoli, ancient Neapolis), a city of Italy, cap. of the kingdom of the Two Sicilies, and of the prov. and dist. of Napoli, on the Bay of Naples, near the foot of Mount Vesuvius. Lat. of observatory 40° 51' 8" N., lon. 14° 18' 5" E. Pop. (1857) 419,860, excluding a garrison of about 20,000, but not strangers. Mean temperature of year 68°·6, winter 47°·6, summer 73°·1 Fahr. Naples is situated on the N. shore of the bay of same name. It is in the form of an amphitheatre, on the slopes of a range of hills. Has fort St Elmo on the N.W., fort del Carmine, and the Castello-Nuovo, between the royal palace and the sea, and the Castello dell'Ovo. Chief edifices, a cathedral, built on 100 granite columns, which belonged to the temple of Apollo; the churches of the holy apostles, built on the ruins of a temple of Mercury; San Paolo, Filippo Neri, Spirito Santo, and San Martino; the royal palace; the old palace used as a record office; the Palazzo degli Studii Publici, which contains the Borbonico library, museum of antiquities, etc. Naples is the usual residence of the sovereign, seat of an archbishop, and of the central administration of the kingdom, and has a commercial tribunal, arsenal, & cannon foundry, ship building yards, and a royal marine hospital. Its university, occupying the old college of the Jesuits, has 54 professorships. It has an episcopal lyceum, medico-surgical school, veterinary school, deaf-mute institution, royal military school, schools of design and music, an observatory, a botanic garden, a mint. It is the centre of all the learned institutions of the kingdom, & has four public libraries, & many public schools; but education is of the lowest kind, and not generally diffused; an exchange, ten theatres, among which the opera, San Carlos, is one of the largest in Italy. The charitable establishments comprise hospitals for the sick, aged, and foundlings, but its streets are, notwithstanding, infested with mendicants of all ages and both sexes. The Marinella, a long open beach, beyond the Castel del Carmine, was formerly the abode of the Lazzaroni, a class which has lost its distinctive features, and the term is now applied to the fishermen. The Teatro di San Carlino is the head-quarters of Pulcinella (Punch) and the characteristic theatre of Naples. There are 60 charitable institutions, comprising hospitals for the sick (sometimes with 2,000 patients), blind, aged, poor, and the orphan. Manufactures, gloves, soap, perfumery, silks, artificial flowers, corals, earthenware, hats, and carriages. It has royal type foundries and iron and glass works. It is the first port of the kingdom; its harbour is formed by a mole, which extends from the centre of the city into the bay. Chief exports, agricultural produce. Imports, manuf. goods and colonial produce. Naples was founded by the Greeks, who called it Parthenope. Virgil studied here; the city, enlarged by Adrian and Constantine, was seized by Belisarius in 536; sieged successfully under the Normans, the emperors of Germany, and the kings of Spain. It has often suffered from earthquakes, and from eruptions of Vesuvius. The French took it in 1798, and again in 1806. Joseph Bonaparte was made king of Naples, but was replaced by Murat in 1808, and the latter was driven from it by the Austrians in 1814. Naples was the scene of an outrage in May 1848, when it was plundered by the Lesserani, and 1,500 lives were lost. Among the numerous objects of interest in the vicinity of Naples are Vesuvius, Pompeii, and Herculaneum, and the Isle of Capri, in its bay. In 1848, 64 m. of railway were opened. One line extends to Nocera, with a branch to Castell'-a-Mare, and another to Capua, 19 m. N. From the latter a branch extends E. 10 m. to Nola.

Forming the W. extremity of the great plain of North Europe, the territory is perfectly flat, with the extension of a few low hills which traverse the prov. of Gelderland, Overijssel, and Utrecht: a considerable portion of it is formed of alluvium, or reworked by human industry from the sea, below the level of which much of it is situated. From the point of the Helder to the Hoek van Holland, at the mouth of the Maas, 78 miles, the coast is partly protected by natural dunes, about 40 feet in height, composed of fine sand upheaved by the sea, and fixed by plantations of sea-grass (arundo arenaria); on the other parts of the coast, especially in Zeeland, Friesland, and Gelderland, the sea is confined by enormous artificial dykes. The principal gulfs of the German Ocean, on this coast, are the Zuyder Zee, the Lauwer Zee, and the Dollart. The principal rivers are the Rhine, Maas, and Scheldt. On entering the Netherlands, the Rhine separates into two branches, the S. most of which, called the Weel, flows W. 45 m., and joins the Maas near Gorcum; whilst the other, called the Rijn (Rhine), flows N.W. 8 m. to near Westervoort, where it it again divides: the New Yssel on right, flowing N. 65 m. to the Zuyder Zee, and the Beneden Rijn on left, flowing W. 30 m. to Wyk-by-Duurstede. Here the Rhine again separates: the main stream called the Leek or Lek, after a W. course of 35 m., joins the Maas 7 m. E. Rotterdam, while a branch on right called the Kromme Rijn, flows N.W. to Utrecht; here the Rhine splits for the fourth time, the right branch called the Vecht, flowing N. to the Zuyder Zee, and the left, called the Old Rhine, W. past Woerden and Leyden, 35 m. to Katwyk on the German Ocean. [MUSEUM—SCHIEDT.] The chief lakes are those of Haarlem (now drained) and the Y, marshes are numerous, and some of them, as the Bourrange and Peel morasses in the E., are extensive. The islands form two principal groups; one situated in the estuary of the Scheldt and the Meuse, comprises N. and S. Beveland, Walcheren, Tholen, Schouwen, Over Flakkee, Voorn, Beyerland, Ysselmonde, etc.; the other, at the entrance of the Zuyder Zee, includes the Texel, Vlieland, Ter-Schelling, and Ameland. There are several islands in the Zuyder Zee. Climate less extreme than in N. Germany. Mean temp. of year (at Amsterdam) 49° F., winter 35° F., summer 64° F., Fahr. Little snow falls. The canal from Amsterdam to the Helder is frequently frozen for three months in the year, and the Zuyder Zee is frequently frozen over in January. Atmosphere humid and unhealthy for strangers, especially in the W. provs. Winds generally strong, and tempests frequent in winter and spring. Prevailing winds N. and N.E.; when W. and N. winds are violent, they cause inundations, by accumulating the waters of the sea upon the coasts, or by repelling that of the rivers. The great amount of stagnant water would render the country uninhabitable but for the strong winds, which purify the atmosphere. The argillaceous soil has no minerals except a little bog iron, but immense deposits of turf and potters' clay. No stone of any size is to be found in the soil; and though, generally speaking, not a wooded country, large trees are by no means rare. The most fertile provs. are those of the S., and the least so those of the N., a large tract of the formerly barren heath on the E. has been brought under culture by the pasper colony of Frederik's Oord: 3-4ths of the land are in pasture. Cereals raised is insufficient for home consumption. The chief crops are rye, buckwheat, barley, and oats; wheat is cultivated chiefly near Utrecht, in Friesland and Zeeland; vegetables, madder, millet, and home radish, in the last two provs.; flax is extensively cultivated in the S. provs., tobacco in Utrecht and Gelderland, and the vine in Luxemburg; potatoes, hemp, rape-seed, calceary, mustard, hops, and beetroot, are cultivated generally. The flora resembles that of other European countries situated in the same latitude, but aquatic plants are more varied and extensive. Horticulture has long been a favourite employment of the Dutch, especially at Haarlem, which exports tulip and other flower roots. Rabbits are abundant, as well as water fowl, and reptiles in the marshes. Storks are numerous, and almost superstitiously revered in some districts, and means are taken to prevent the destruction and to augment the number of these useful birds. The coasts abound in eel, turbot, sole, and other flat fish. Cattle and draught horses are highly valued. Dairy work is the chief branch of rural industry; butter and cheese are in great repute, and form objects of extensive commerce. The fisheries formed the origin of property in the Netherlands, and the herrings prepared by the Dutch still maintain their superiority. There are a great many men and boats employed in the herring fishery. The whale fishery in the Sea of Spitzbergen has been profitably carried on since the 16th century. The manufacturing industry of the country is very active. During the 17th and 18th centuries, its topography enjoyed a well merited reputation. The absence of coal, and the prevalence of strong winds, have led to the adoption of the windmill as a motive power, and it is universally employed in all kinds of work. The chief manufs. are linen of the finest quality, woollens, silks and velvets, paper, leather, cordage, hats, ribbons, saltpetre, and tobacco. The manuf. of cotton has been recently introduced. There are numerous distilleries of "Geneva" (rather jenever, from the juniper berry, with which the gin is flavoured), or "Hollands," and extensive bleach-fields, brick and tile works. Holland presents the appearance of an immense net-work of canals, which form the usual access not only to towns and villages, but even to private mansions. The most important is that of North Holland, between Amsterdam and the Helder, 50 m. in length, 125 feet broad at the surface, and 21 feet in depth. By means of this important work, ships bound for Amsterdam avoid the danger and delay of navigating the Zuyder Zee: it is spacious enough to admit two frigates abreast. Since not only the surface but the bed of many of the canals is above the level of the land, the drainage of the polders or meadows, through which they pass, is an object of great solicitude; it is effected by means of pumps worked by windmills. In a country where human industry is engaged in a continual struggle with the sea, from the domains of which it has been wrested, the management of dykes, canals, and roads, is a special object of attention on the part of the government. The roads which are formed on the dykes, and bordered by canals, are excellent. In 1833, 183 miles of railway were completed from Amsterdam W. to Haarlem and S. to Leyden, the Hague and Rotterdam, and S. and E. by Utrecht to Arnhem. The principal imports consist of colonial products and manufactured goods, corn, wines, cotton, wool, dried fish, and hides. Chief exports are butter, cheese, gin, the manufactures of the country, and colonial produce. Value of exports in 1832, 273,494,535 florins; do. of imports, 322,719,229 florins. With few natural resources, the inhabitants were driven to commerce as a matter of necessity.

At the end of the 16th century, they obtained possession of the Molucca Islands, and secured a monopoly of the spice trade; at the end of the 17th century, nearly half of the shipping of Europe belonged to the Netherlands; but in consequence of the wars in which she was at that time engaged, and the increase of the mercantile navies of other countries, she soon lost her commercial pre-eminence. The country took an active share in the wars against Louis XIV. It was conquered by the French at the commencement of the revolution, and in 1795 formed the Batavian republic; in 1806 it was made the kingdom of Holland, which Napoleon I. reduced to a dep. of France in 1810. After her incorporation with the French empire, Holland was deprived of all her colonies in the eastern seas. At the establishment of peace in 1814, these colonial possessions were restored, and a period of commercial prosperity succeeded. Holland and Belgium were then united into a single kingdom; but this union of two countries, betwixt which no sympathy existed, was broken by the revolt of Belgium in 1830. By the treaty of London, 19th April 1839, Belgium ceded to the Netherlands a portion of Luxemburg and Limburg. The Dutch occupy the country of the ancient Batavi and Frisii; their language is a dialect of the German. Flemish is still spoken in the S. The greater number of the inhabitants are Protestants. The Reformed Church (by far the most numerous body, and of which the reigning family are members) is Calvinistic in point of doctrine, and its form of government is Presbyterian. The numbers belonging to the different creeds are—Reformed Church 1,600,000, Separatists 42,000, French, English, and Scotch churches 10,000, Lutherans 64,000, Lutheran Separatists 9,000, Baptists 38,000, Armenians 5,000, Jews 68,000, and Roman Catholics 1,303,923. The government pays the salaries of several British Presbyterian ministers settled in the Netherlands, and whose churches are incorporated with the Dutch Reformed Church. The greatest toleration has always existed in regard to religion. The Roman Catholics are under the bishop of Utrecht. Education is well conducted and very generally diffused. The teachers are placed under the guardianship of 70 inspectors, who act under an inspector-general, depending on the minister of the interior; they grant licences for the establishment of schools, and present to the government, three times a year, an account of the state of public instruction. In 1854 there were in the Netherlands 3 universities, at Leyden, Groningen, and Utrecht; 2 atheneums, and 68 Latin schools. For elementary instruction, there were 70 districts, 2,126 communal, and 630 private schools. The ecclesiastical schools comprised 6 Roman Catholic and 2 Protestant seminaries; 1 Jewish school; there are 3 military, 1 naval, and 1 veterinary school, and numerous academies of the fine arts; 2 institutions for deaf-mutes, and 1 for the blind. The proportion of attendance at school is 1 in 8 of the entire population; while in Drenthe and Overijssel the proportion is 1 in 6. The benevolent institutions comprise numerous hospitals for the sick and infirm, and for orphans; societies of public good, and several pauper colonies. Mendicancy is interdicted throughout the kingdom. The people are remarkable for the extreme cleanliness of their streets and dwellings. The government is a constitutional representative monarchy, the title of the sovereign is King of the Netherlands, Prince of Orange Nassau, Grand Duke of Luxemburg and Duke of Limburg. The crown prince has the title of Prince of Orange. The usual residence of the king is at the Hague. The Dutch afford a very remarkable example of industry and perseverance: to a country almost floating on the waters, they have given a firm foundation; without stone, and growing comparatively little timber, they have built spacious cities; and though nearly destitute of arable land, their towns have often been granaries for surrounding states. With a territory not much larger than Wales, this people have maintained an army, a fleet, and a commerce, ranking high among the states of Europe. The standing army in 1857 amounted to 56,495 men of all arms. Navy, 2 ships of the line (84 guns); 3 ships (74 guns); 14 frigates, 12 corvettes, 11 brigs, 21 steam-ships, in all 88 vessels, carrying 2,000 guns, besides 49 gun-boats, carrying 174 guns. There is only one privileged bank. Public revenue (1858) 74,144,195 florins. Expenditure 73,388,678 florins. National debt 1,900,968,330 florins. The marine force in actual service on 1st July 1854, comprised 6,180 men, exclusive of those in the colonies. The merchant marine, 1843, comprised 2,061 vessels, aggregate burden 19,749 lasts. The Netherlands is a name, which, for several centuries, was applied to the countries now forming the kingdoms of Belgium, and the Netherlands, and part of the N. of France (depa. Nord and Pas-de-Calais). This country belonged almost entirely to Charles v. United to Franche-Comté, it formed the circle of Burgundy. From this 7 of the N. prova. separated themselves in 1579, and formed the Republic of Holland, or the Seven United Provinces. Part of the low country was conquered by Louis XIV. and called the French Netherlands; the rest, first under the dominion of Spain, passed in 1714 to that of Austria, and was called Spanish Netherlands, Austrian Netherlands or Belgium.

NEUCHÂTEL, NEUCHÂTEL or NEUBURG, a frontier canton of Switzerland, in the N.W., having S.E. the Lake of Neuchâtel, and on other sides France and the cantons Bern and Vaud. Area 281 sq. m. Pop. (1851) 70,679, mostly Protestants. The Jura mountains intersect it from S. to N., and the river Doubs bounds it on the N.W. Pastures occupy most part of the surface. Along the lake are numerous vineyards, and good wines are exported to the adjacent cantons. Except in wine, kitchen vegetables, and hay, the vegetable products are insufficient for home consumption, and corn is imported from the cantons Bern and Basle. Many cattle are reared, and cheese is an export of consequence. From 18,000 to 20,000 persons are more or less employed in watchmaking, in both the urban and rural dists.; and cotton fabrics for export to the Netherlands, Prussia, Belgium, and Italy; hosiery, cutlery, and metallic wares generally, are other chief manufs. Until 1848, Neuchâtel acknowledged the sovereignty of Prussia; a revolution having then occurred, it became a democratic member of the Swiss Confederation, but it was restored to Prussia in April 1852. Principal towns are Neuchâtel, Chaux-de-Fonds, Valengin, and Le Locle.

NEWCASTLE, a town of Upper Canada, British North America, on the N. shore of Lake Ontario, 86 m. E.N.E. Toronto. The dist. of which it is the cap., between Midland and Home dists., comprises nearly all the basin of the Trent, and had, in 1835, a pop. of 30,245.

NEWCASTLE, a bor. of New South Wales, E. Australia, co. Northumberland, on Port Hunter, 70 m. N.N.E. Sydney. It has valuable coal mines, whence large quantities of coal are annually exported.

NEWCASTLE-UPON-TYNE, Pons Æli, afterwards Monkchester, a parl. and munic. bor., town, and river-port of England, cap. co. Northumberland, and a co. of itself, on the N. bank of the Tyne, across which it communicates with Gateshead by a bridge of 9 arches, 53 m. N.E. Carlisle; also with a station on the Great Northumberland Railway. Area of town and co. 2,000 ac. Pop. of parl. bor. 87,784. It stands mostly on declivities rising steeply from the vicinity of the river, and early in the present century it consisted of little more than a collection of narrow, ill-built, and inconvenient streets; but within the last thirty years it has been rendered one of the handsomest towns in England, by the enterprise of Mr Grainger, a builder and native of the town, whose improvements are conjectured to have cost between one and two millions sterling. The public market, occupying nearly 3 acres; the exchange, with 3 Cornthian fronts, and containing a news room and exhibition rooms of the North of England Society of Fine Arts; the theatre, music hall, arcade, a long Corinthian edifice, occupied by banks, public offices, auction rooms, and chambers, are also works by Mr Grainger; and at the head of Grey Street is a column 136 feet in height, supporting a statue of Earl Grey, by Bailey. The Moot hall, or assize court for the co. Northumberland, in the style of the Temple of Theseus at Athens; the guild hall and old exchange, mansion-house, custom-house, police office, town gaol, erected at a cost of 47,000; Fandon Dean bridge, across a deep glen; a viaduct across the Tyne, cost 254,460; connecting the North British and Newcastle Railways; the public baths, assembly rooms, racket court, and barracks for 1,000 men, are among the principal public edifices. St Nicholas's church, in the decorated English style, and 230 feet in length, has an elegant steeple 201 feet in height; St Andrew's and St John's are both interesting edifices, and the former has an altar-piece by Giordano. All Saints', a Grecian structure, has a spire 202 feet in height; St Thomas' chapel, the Scotch church, the Roman Catholic, and several Methodist chapels. Dissenters are numerous, possessing 24 out of 90 of the places of worship. The wall of Adrian passed through the site of the town, and several of its remaining towers are employed for halls of corporate trades. The castle, whence the town derives its name, is a superior structure, founded by Robert of Normandy; and in the time of the historian Leland, Newcastle was the most strongly defended town in England. It is now chiefly noted as the principal centre of the English coal trade. Within a radius of 8 m. 50 coal pits are wrought; and in 1853 the coal shipped coastwise amounted to 2,157,273 tons; do. foreign 1,054,635 tons. Extensive manufs. of bottle and window glass, steam and other machinery; leather, soap, iron wares, sheet lead, and chemical products, with ship and boat building, rope and sail making, malting, brewing, etc., are carried on; and metal from the Stanhope mines, bricks, tar, and grind-stones, are among the exports. The port comprises all the navigation of the Tyne, with Seaton sluice and Blyth creeks. Number of vessels belonging to the port in 1851, 888, aggregate burden 179,538 tons. Value of imports in 1850, 920,068*l*. It communicates by steam vessels with Leith, Berwick, Whitby, Scarborough, Hull, and London; by the Great North of England Railway with Darlington and York; North British with Scotland, and by other railways with Shields and Sunderland. Newcastle is the seat of literary and philosophical, natural history, antiquarian, law, medical, botanical, and other societies, of one of the provincial medical schools in England, a medical college in connection with Durham university, opened 1st October 1832, a Trinity house, a royal grammar school, numerous other institutions for education, a large infirmary, a dispensary, lying-in hospital, lunatic asylum, a great variety of endowed charities, quarter and petty sessions, mayor's, sheriff's, consociation, and river courts, and assizes and quarter-sessions for Northumberland. Corp. rev. (1848) 62,491*l*. It sends 2 members to House of Commons. Reg. electors (1848) 5,011. Among its eminent natives are Admiral Lord Collingwood, Lord Chancellor Eldon, and the poet Akenside. On the 6th October 1834, a vast loss of life and property occurred through an explosion of combustible stores, in consequence of a great fire, which broke out in Gateshead, on the other side of the river.

NEWCASTLE-UNDER-LYME or LYME, a parl. and munic. bor., town, and pa., co. and 15 m. N.N.W. Stafford, and about 4 m. N.E. the Whitmore station of the London and North-Western Railway. Area of pa. 640 ac. Pop. 10,390; do. of town, 10,569. It has 2 churches, a very handsome Roman Catholic chapel, a grammar school, founded in the reign of Elizabeth; almshouses, and numerous other charities; a guild hall, market-house, theatre, public library, literary institution, public promenade, union workhouse; extensive manufs. of hats, some silk and cotton factories, and in the vicinity potteries, iron works, and large collieries. A branch canal connects it with the Grand Trunk navigation. It sends 2 members to House of Commons. It is a polling place for the co. Of the castle built here by the Earl of Chester, in 1180, and whence the town takes its name, but slight traces remain.

NEW FOREST, a royal forest and hundred of England, occupying most part of the S.W. portion of the co. Hants, W. Southampton-water. Circumference of forest about 50 m. It is divided into bailiwicks, under foresters, woodwards, and rangers, the whole under a lord-warden, whose forest-courts are held at Lyndhurst. It abounds in game, red-deer, hogs, and semi-wild horses. It supplies excellent timber, aspe-chiefly valuable from its proximity to Portsmouth dockyard. Crown revenue (1898) 2,228*l*.

NEWFOUNDLAND, an island, and one of the British colonies, North America, off the coast of Labrador, mostly between lat. 46° 40' and 51° 37' N., lon. 53° 25' and 59° 15' W., separated from the mainland by the Strait of Bellefleur, 12 m. across. Estimated area 36,000 sq. m., and pop. (1885) 86,566. Shape very irregular, and shores greatly indented. The country in the E. is generally low, W. ward more rugged and mountainous, and especially so in a peninsula which extends from the N. towards Labrador. Principal navigable rivers, the Humber and the River of Exploits, which latter rises in Red Indian lake, one of several considerable lakes in the interior. Climate in winter very severe, the thermometer frequently falling to 30° below the freezing point; in summer there is a brief hot season; the colony is generally healthy. Surface mostly marshy, or covered with a scrubby vegetation, and the soil is ill-suited to agriculture. Kitchen vegetables are accordingly the principal crops raised; pasturage is however plentiful, and the plains abound with vast herds of caribou deer, which, with the famous Newfoundland breed of dogs, wolves, bears, foxes, and some beavers, constitute the prevailing animals. Timber is scarce; the principal resources of the pop. are in the cod, seal, and salmon fisheries, the chief fishing grounds being off the S.E. coast. The great bank of Newfoundland on this side, is the most extensive submarine plateau yet discovered, being about 600 m. in length, and in some places 200 m. in breadth, with a depth varying from 25 to 35 fathoms, and a bottom of solid rock. The principal fishing ground is over this bank between lat. 42° and 48° N. In 1851, the exports from Newfoundland comprised 1,017,674 quintals of dried fish, worth 489,014*l*., upwards of 2,744,910 gallons of oil, worth 319,877*l*., seal skins to 76,592*l*., salmon to 12,024*l*., and herrings to 18,361*l*. The seal fishing has become important within the present century, and in the above year employed 323 vessels, and upwards of 11,377 hands. A total of 1,265 ships, aggregate burden 142,467 tons, entered; and 1,106 ditto, burden 128,890 tons, left the ports of this colony, and the exports amounted in value to 558,751*l*., and the imports to 943,191*l*. Customs revenue, 1850, 64,524*l*. Since 1832, the colony has had a representative assembly of 15 members, with an executive council of 12 members, appointed, like the governor, by the crown. During the same year the revenue of the colony amounted to 82,652*l*., and the expenditure to 71,907*l*. Is a Protestant sec. St John, the cap. is on the S.E. coast.

NEW GRANADA. [GRANADA (New).]

NEW GUINEA. [PAFUA.]

NEW HALL, a township of England, co. Chester, pa. Acton, 4 m. S.S.W. Nantwich. Pop. 801.

NEW HAMPSHIRE, one of the U. S., North America, in the N. part of the Union, mostly between lat. 43° 40' and 45° 30' N., lon. 70° 30' and 73° 35' W., nearly enclosed by Maine, Vermont, and Massachusetts, having S.E. only 18 m. of marshy coast. Area 9,280 sq. m. Pop. 317,964. In the N., it comprises the loftiest ground in the U. S.; Mount Washington is 6,428 feet in height, and the region around it is well timbered; elsewhere the surface consists in a great part of open plains, and is more adapted for a grazing than a corn raising country. Principal rivers, the Merrimack and Connecticut, which latter forms all its W. boundary. Near its centre is Lake Winnepiscogee. Products comprise maize, wheat, and other grains, hops, potatoes, maple-sugar, timber, cattle, mated provisions, and wool; but this is becoming more a manufacturing than an agricultural state. Principal manufactures are of woollen and cotton fabrics, iron wares, and paper; total capital employed in manufs. in 1859, 14,000,000 dollars. Foreign trade inconsiderable and decreasing, its produce being mostly exported through Massachusetts and Connecticut. Value of exports (1850) at its sole port of Portsmouth 8,227 dollars; of imports 40,079 ditto. Besides this town, it contains Concord (its cap.), Nashua, Dover, and Hanover. Public revenue about 172,600 dollars annually. The state has no debt. It sends 3 representatives to Congress.

NEW HANOVER, a region forming the coast line of British North America, along the Pacific Ocean, between lat. 50° and 54° N., having N. Russian America, S. Vancouver Island and Queen Charlotte Sound.—II. an island, Pacific Ocean, in lat. 23° S., lon. 150° E., and separated by a narrow strait on its N.E. from New Ireland.

NEWHAVEN, a seaport and pa. of England, co. Sussex, on the Ouse, at its mouth in the English Channel, on a branch of the South Coast Railway, 4 m. S.E. Lewis. Area of pa. 710 ac. Pop. 1,368. The town is neatly built, has a church, a drawbridge across the Ouse, small fort, and a good harbour. Exports agricultural produce; imports coal and foreign timber. It has steam communication with Dieppe, in France.

NEWHAVEN, a quoad sacra pa. and marine vill. of Scotland, 2 m. N. of, and connected with Edinburgh, by Northern Railway. Pop. 2,103, partly employed in fishing. There is a stone pier, and a chain pier at Trinity 500 feet long. The vill. belongs to the city of Edinburgh; 1 m. W. is Granton. [GRANTON.]

NEWHAVEN, a city and seaport, U. S., North America, and with Hartford, the joint cap. of Connecticut, on an inlet of Long Island Sound, 34 m. S.S.W. Hartford. Lat. of Yale College 41° 18' 5" N., lon. 72° 56' 5" W. Pop. 22,539. It stands in a plain, and is built on a regular plan. Public edifices comprise numerous churches, Yale College, which, in 1850, had 482 students, a library of 51,000 volumes, the finest mineralogical cabinet in the United States, an anatomical museum, the new state house, state hospital, academies, and benevolent institutions: and it has a beautiful public cemetery. The harbour is furnished with fine wharfs, and the coasting, fishing, and foreign trade is large. Shipping of port 1859, 16,731 tons. Steamers ply daily to New York; a railway connects the city with Hartford, and it communicates by Farmington Canal with Northampton and other ports of Massachusetts. It has manufs. of woollen cloths, leather, rope, machinery, and hardware.—II. a township, Vermont, 30 m. W. Montpelier. Pop. 1,863.—III. a tnshp., New York, 10 m. N.E. Oswego. Pop. 731.—II. (near Hythe), same co., 3½ m. N.E. Hythe. Area 3,300 ac. Pop. 439.—III. co. and 9 m. S.E. Oxford. Area 5,080. Pop. 434.—IV. (Bagpate), co. Glo'ter, 5½ m. W.N.W. Tetbury. Area 1,700 ac. Pop. 439.—V. (South), co. Oxford, 4 m. W.N.W. Deddington. Area 1,460 ac. Pop. 419.

NEW JERSEY, one of the U. S., North America, in the E. part of the Union, mostly between lat. 39° and 41° 24' N., lon. 74° and 75° 30' W., having E. the Atlantic Ocean, N. New York, and W. Pennsylvania and Delaware, from which it is separated by the Delaware river. Length 163 miles, breadth 52 miles. Area 8,820 sq. m. Pop. 499,555, of these 23,093 were free coloured. Surface level in the S., undulating in the centre, crossed by the Alleghany mountains in the N. The Hudson river forms its N.E. boundary. Principal crops, wheat, oats, maize, rye, and potatoes. In the hilly parts many cattle are reared, and cheese, butter, and wool, are important products. Iron, building-stone, and sand, are the chief mineral products. Manufactures of cotton and woollen goods, iron wares, paper, leather, and earthenware, are important. New York and Philadelphia are the principal outlets for the exports, and channels of its import trade. In 1853 the railways completed in this state had an aggregate length of 348 m., they communicate with others in Pennsylvania, and the state has several canals, of which Morris Canal, 101 m. in length, connecting the Hudson and Delaware rivers, is the principal. Public rev. (1850) 138,544 dollars, which was more than adequate to the expenditure; and there is little, if any, public debt. New Jersey sends 5 representatives to Congress. Principal towns, Trenton, the cap., Newark, Burlington, and Jersey. It has 3 colleges, several theological seminaries, 66 academies, and 1,207 primary schools. The state is divided into 18 cos. The original constitution was formed in 1776. The present, formed in 1844, provides for a government chosen for three years, a senate composed of one member from each co. and an assembly of 60 members. Bergen co. was first colonized by the Dutch in 1614.

NEW ORKNEY, an island group in the S. Atlantic, forming a part of New S. Shetland, S.E. Cape Horn. Chief islands, Pomona and Melville.

NEW ORLEANS, a city and river port of the U. S., North America, State Louisiana, and next to New York, the principal commercial entrepôt of the Union, in the S. part of which it is situated, on the N. bank of the Mississippi, 106 m. from its mouth in the Gulf of Mexico. Lat. 29° 57' 7" N., lon. 90° 6' W. Mean temperature of year 69° 8, winter 55° 8, summer 82°, Fahr. Pop. (1840) 102,193, (1850) 119,285, (1853) 145,442, of whom 28,174 were slaves and free coloured. It stands in an alluvial flat, considerably below the level of high tide in the Mississippi, which has been embanked for a long distance, to prevent inundation. Adjacent swamps render it very unhealthy in summer, and it frequently suffers from yellow fever. The cemeteries here are peculiar, owing to the low-lying situation of the city, the tombs being built of brick, rising tier upon tier from one to three stores in height, each coffin space being arched, as burial in the ground is never attempted except in the case of paupers, who are often washed out of their graves when the Mississippi overflows. It consists of the city proper, and 6 faubourgs or suburbs, all regularly laid out, well supplied with water, and as well drained as circumstances admit. Except Canal Street, few of the public thoroughfares are more than 40 feet in width. Houses mostly of brick, many stuccoed, and in several quarters they are furnished with balconies, and similar in architecture to the dwellings in France and Spain. Here are fewer churches comparatively than in any other city in the United States. Principal edifices, a Roman Catholic cathedral with 4 towers, the state-house, custom-house, 2 exchanges, United States mint and land office, several hospitals, 8 theatres, the Ursuline convent, college, and orphan asylum. The levee, on summit of the embankment along the river, forms a fine esplanade, and ships of the largest size can discharge their cargoes close to the bank. New Orleans is the main outlet for the produce of the countries watered by the Mississippi and its tributaries, and the great port for the shipment of cotton, of which article, in the year 1852, 1,435,915 bales were exported, 773,342 to Great Britain, 196,254 to France, and 572,303 to various parts of the United States. In the same year, 93,715 hhds of tobacco, chiefly sent to Spain, Boston, and England, 63,000 do. of sugar, 544,711 barrels of flour, 792,543 kegs of lard, 266,989 pigs of lead, and 874,774 sacks of corn were exported, besides bacon, beef, whiskey, coffee, etc. In 1853, the foreign arrivals were 872 ships (tonnage 428,358), and the clearances for foreign ports were 1,115 (tonnage 544,482). New Orleans is connected by a railway with Lake Borgne, an inlet of the Gulf of Mexico, 10 m. distant; with Lake Poucharrain, 5 m. distant, by railway and canal, and with Carrollton by a railway; and other railways are formed, or in course of construction, uniting the city with the other important cities of America. It communicates by steamers with New York, and most of the large trading cities in the W. Indies. The city and suburbs form 3 municipalities. It was founded by the French in 1717, and purchased, with Louisiana, by the United States in 1803. In 1815 a British force, under General Pakenham, compelled to retreat from before it by the troops under General Jackson.

Yakutsk, in which they are comprised, between lat. 73° 12' and 76° 20' N., lon. 135° 20' and 150° 30' E., and consisting of Kotlinol, Fadievskol, New Siberia, Liakhov, and some smaller islands. New Siberia, the most E. of these islands, is 75 m. in length by 30 m. in breadth. It was discovered by Hedenstrom in 1806.

NEW SOUTH SHETLAND, an archipelago and portion of mainland, in the Pacific Ocean, lat. 61° to 64° 30' S., lon. 63° W., and 600 m. S. Tierra del Fuego, and the coast line of which has been explored beyond the Antarctic circle. Principal islands, Livingston, Cornwallis, King George, Clarence, and Elephant. This region was discovered by Gheritz in 1598, and afterwards further explored by Cook and Weddell, and its S. part by Biscoe in 1832, and by Captain Sir J. Ross in 1842.

NEW SOUTH WALES, a British colonial territory in E. Australia, bounded on the W. by 141° of E. lon. and the colony of S. Australia; on the S., by the River Murray and the colony of Victoria; and on the N. by lat. 26° S. Area is computed at 450,000 sq. m. Pop. (1858) about 31,600 colonists, exclusive of a few aborigines. The census of 1856 gave the pop. as 268,737. The colony was first settled in January 1788 by a body of convicts, who were landed first at Botany Bay, but from which the authorities in charge soon after removed to Port Jackson. In the S. of the colony are the Australian Alps, where the Bogong range attains a height of 6,669 feet, and the neighbouring Kosciuszko 6,510 ft., both being nearly all the year covered with snow. The Murrumbidgee River divides these ranges from the coast range of the Blue Mountains, running nearly N. and S. about 40 miles inland, and attaining an elevation of above 3000 ft. Mt. York being 3,440 ft., Mt. Hay 2,428, etc. Towards the north, and further inland, are extensive and elevated pastoral tracts, such as the Liverpool Plains, enjoying a cool climate, as compared with their low position of 30° to 32° S. lat. Sea View Mt. in this district is 6,000 ft. above the level of the sea. The main range, with its spurs and the creeks and streams that issue from either flank are numerous, and are being worked in many places as gold fields, since the great discovery at Ophir, by Hargreaves, in 1851. Principal streams are the Shoalhaven, Hawkesbury, Hunter, Manning, McLeay, Clarence, Richmond, Brisbane, Burnett, Fitzroy, McKenzie, Burdekin, etc. The water-shed towards the interior is upon a larger scale. In the extreme S. the Murray rises in the Alps, being joined in its westward course by the Lachlan and Murrumbidgee, and finally the Darling from the north, besides various rivers draining Victoria from the south, the Bogan, Macquarie, Castlereagh, Namoi or Peel River, Eryden, Barwan, Balonne or Condamina, and the Maranoa. The Barroo or Victoria, discovered in 1846, rises near these latter, and running W. by N., then S. W., into Cooper's Creek of Sturt, and finally to Lake Torrens and the head of Spencer's Gulf. The chief inlets and harbours are Twofold Bay, in the S., Jervis Bay, Botany Bay, the fine harbour of Port Jackson, Broken Bay, Ports Hunter, Stephens, and Macquarie, Trial and Moreton Bays, and beyond the 26th parallel, Wide and Hervey Bays, Port Curtis, and Keppell Bay. The climate is salubrious and agreeable. The mean temperature of the year at Sydney in about 34° S. lat., is about 65°, but varies 3° to 4° in one year as compared with another. The extent of land under culture was, in 1856, 185,015 acres, of which 106,124 were under wheat. In 1857 there were 8,185,163 sheep, 2,143,664 head of cattle, and 175,002 horses. The pastoral products of that year exported were—wool, 19,300,814 lbs., valued at 1,303,070*l*.; hides, 90,609; and tallow, 77,314 cwts. The quantity of gold exported was 44,463 ounces. The quantity of gold brought from the mines in 1858 was 223,215 oz. The mint cost about 60,000*l*.; its yearly expenses are 15,000*l*., and revenue above 12,000*l*. The coin circulates, by consent of the free governments, in the adjacent colonies, and by imperial proclamation it is legal tender in Mauritius, Ceylon, and Hong Kong. As in Victoria, there is an export duty of 2s. 6d. per ounce. Coal is plentiful. Imports for 1857 were 6,729,400*l*., and exports 4,012,000*l*. The shipping inward, in 1856, was, 1,143 vessels of 331,679 tons, and outward it was 1,219 vessels of 386,113 tons. The public revenue for 1857 was 1,196,301*l*., exclusive of loans. The first telegraphic post in the colony was planted in 1857. The colony was at first laid out into what are called the 19 old counties; these were afterwards increased, until they now number 63. There are also 18 great squattling or pastoral districts, which are partly, however, included in the counties, and comprehend that vast area which is bounded to the S. and W. by the Murray and the Darling, and expands over more than 14° of lat. The chief towns are Sydney, Maitland E. and W., Parramatta, Brisbane, Ipswich, Bathurst, Goulburn, Braidwood, Newcastle, etc. Like the adjacent colonies, N. S. Wales is self-governed, with a governor of the Queen's appointment, who acts through a popular ministry, co-operating with an elected assembly, and a crown, nominated Second or Upper Chamber. In 1856, there were 565 schools in the colony, with 29,246 scholars.

NEW YORK, one of the middle U. S. of North America, and though not the largest, yet in every other respect, the leading state of the Union; between lat. 40° 30' and 45° N., lon. 72° and 79° 55' W., having N. W. Lakes Erie and Ontario, and the river St Lawrence, separating it from Upper Canada, and on the other sides, the states Pennsylvania, New Jersey, Connecticut, Massachusetts, and Vermont, except at its S. extremity, where it touches the Atlantic Ocean, in which it includes Long Island. Area 45,600 sq. m. Pop. 3,090,022. Mean annual temperature of New York city 51°.8, summer 70°.3, winter 30°.1, Fahr. It is mostly an elevated region, with extensive indentations, watered by the Hudson, Mohawk, Oswego, Genesee, and other rivers, including many affluents of the Susquehanna. The Alleghenies traverse its E. part in two parallel chains, and the Round Top, one of the Catskill mtns., is 3,804 feet in height. It contains Seneca, Cayuga, Oneida, Canandaigua, George, and many other lakes; Lake Champlain forms a part of its N.E. frontier. Long Island, Staten Island, and Manhattan are also included in this state. Soil in the S. rather light but fitted for pasturage; it improves on proceeding northward, and the W. part is a highly fertile country. All the crops common in Britain are raised, with the addition of maize. The stock of sheep is estimated at upwards of 5,000,000, or about one-fifth the total number in the Union; horses and cattle are more numerous than in any other state. In the W. and the S.E. are extensive forests. Iron is abundant; and the salt springs at Onondaga and elsewhere, yield an abundant supply of salt. Manufactures are in great variety, and the foreign commerce is greater than that of any other state. Total value of imports (1853) 132,229,306 dollars; ditto of exports 57,454,456 dols., the latter comprising more than three-fifths of the total exports of the Union. Total length of the canals in operation 860 m.; the principal are the Erie, Champlain, Cayuga, and Chenango canals, connecting the Atlantic rivers with the Canadian lakes, and the first of which is 364 miles in length. Total length of railways completed (1853) 2,122 miles. Public revenue, being average of last five years, 2,518,044 dollars. In January 1853, there was a school fund of 6,641,930 dollars. This state is divided into 69 cos., and sends 2 senators and 32 representatives to congress. Principal cities, Albany, the cap., New York, Brooklyn, Hudson, Buffalo, Oswego, and Ogdensburg, with Schenectady and numerous towns along the line of the Erie Canal. The first settlement was made by the Dutch on Manhattan Island in 1614. In 1664 the English obtained possession of the country; in 1678, it was retaken by the Dutch, but soon after restored to the English. The present constitution was framed in 1821, Governor and senators elected biennially.

NEW YORK, the largest and most populous city, principal seaport, and commercial cap. of the U. S., N. America, on an island near the S. extremity of New York State, between the mouth of the Hudson river and East river, which separates Long Island from the mainland; lat. of city-hall 40° 42' 7" N., lon. 74° 0' 7" W. Area of city, including co., and Manhattan, or New York Island (separated from Westchester co., by Harlem river, crossed by 3 bridges), with some adjacent islets, 14,000 ac. Pop. (1850) 515,994; in 1853, 850,000. The city, 9 m. in circumference, occupies a triangular area, the apex of which is covered by old, narrow, and crooked streets, but by far the greater part of New York consists of regular and handsome thoroughfares, the principal of which, Broadway, intersecting the city throughout, is nearly 4 m. in length, and bordered by shops or stores. Pearl, Cedar, Pine, Front, Water, and South, streets between it and the E. river, are important marts of business, and Wall Street is the seat of the chief monetary transactions. Greenwich, E. Broadway, Henry, Madison, Bleeker, and Bond Streets and the Bowers, between the Broadway and Hudson river, are elegant public streets. The battery, Washington Square, in front of the New York University, Union Square, with a fountain, are among the chief open spaces; in the Park, an area of about 11 acres, is the city hall, a Grecian edifice of marble and freestone, 216 feet in length by 105 feet in breadth. The Merchant's Exchange in Wall Street, having a central dome, has been constructed at a cost of 1,800,000 dollars. Amongst the most conspicuous buildings are the custom house on the site of the old city hall (where Washington was inaugurated president); the University; Columbia college; the hall of justice, American institute, and house of detention; Trinity church, a Gothic structure; St Paul's church with an Ionic portico, and a steeple 224 feet in height; St John's, St Thomas's, the Dutch, French Protestant, and Baptist churches; St Patrick's cathedral; the Society library; Gothic hall, and Aston house, a vast hotel, containing 390 rooms. New York has 254 churches, 53 banks, 6 theatres, 2 museums, and numerous large hotels and storehouses. In the vicinity of New York is Greenwood Cemetery, covering an area of 400 acres, and laid out in the most varied manner. The city is well supplied with water from Croton water works, 38 m. distant. Other public institutions are, the New York hospital, infirmary, deaf-mutes, and lunatic asylums, and "Long Island Farms," a fund for provision of destitute children. Manufs. are in great variety, and the total capital employed in 1850, was estimated at 34,232,822 dollars. The harbour is 25 m. in circumference; it has 8 entrances, defended by four strong batteries, and ships of the largest size can come up to the city wharves. New York communicates by the Hudson and Erie Canal with the W. States, Canada, and the whole region of the North American lakes, of which countries it is the great entrepôt. In 1852, its exports amounted in value to 71,525,639 dollars, and imports to 127,441,394 dollars, or one-half of the whole imports into the United States. Customs rev. in ditto 31,382,797 dollars. In the same year 3,847 ships, aggregate burden 1,709,988 tons entered the port. Reg. shipping of the port (1851) 804,309 tons. Regular lines of packets maintain communication between New York and all the principal parts of the United States, others in the West Indies, Mexico; and S. America, and Liverpool, Southampton, Antwerp, and Havre in Europe. It is connected with Harlem by a railway 7 m. in length, & also with other chief cities of America. The city is divided into 17 wards, and governed by a mayor and common council. It was the seat of the first American Congress in 1785.

NEW ZEALAND, a British colonial territory in the S. Pacific, consisting of a chain of two large and one small island, besides others adjacent of less note. The main chain extends from Cape North in S. lat. 34° 18', to Cape South in 47° 20', and from C. West in E. lon. 166° 30', to C. East in E. lon. 178° 30'. The general direction is S.E. for above 400 miles, and S.W. for 900 m. The area of the three islands is computed at 121,875 sq. miles. Cook's Strait separates the North Island from the Middle Island, and the latter is separated from the South Island by Forreux Strait. When established as a colony in 1840, the N., Middle, and S. Islands were renamed, respectively, New Ulster, New Munster, and New Leinster; but these titles are nearly out of use, since the provincial divisions with their local governments have been instituted. These provinces are at present six, viz., Auckland, New Plymouth, and Wellington, in the North Island; and Nelson, Canterbury, and Otago, in the Middle Island. Pop. of colonists by census 1856, 45,540 (exclusive of the military), consisting of males 23,316, females 20,184. Aborigines estimated at 60,000, chiefly in the North Island, in the Auckland Province. They are evidently decreasing, while the colonists rapidly increase. Pop. of the latter, 1859, 55,600. Both coal and copper are met with. Gold is extensively exported. The celebrated kauri pine, is produced abundantly. The Phormium tenax, or New Zealand flax, also is an abundant produce. In 1857 there were 250,000 acres under cultivation. There were in the colony 1,200,000 sheep, 100,000 head of cattle, 12,000 horses, and 100,000 pigs. The value of wool export for 1856 was 146,072*l.* The total imports was 719,161*l.*, and of exports 313,163*l.*; while the shipping inwards were 326 of 83,748 tons, and outwards 322 of 82,941 tons. The climate is equable, pleasant, and salubrious. The mean annual temperature being, for Auckland, in S. lat. 36° 50', 58° 30'; for New Plymouth, in S. lat. 39° 8', 53° 30'; for Wellington, in lat. 41° 16', 56'; for Nelson, on the south side of Cook's Strait, lat. 41° 15', 54'; for Christchurch, in lat. 43° 35', 53'; and for Otago, in lat. 45° 46', 50'. The mean of the coldest month at Otago is 42°, and of the warmest at Auckland 68°. The country is subject to high winds. The average rain-fall of the year, in the North Island, varies in the respective provinces from 4½ inches to 55 inches; while in the South Island it is only from 30 to 34½ inches. Snow seldom falls, excepting in the southern parts of the Middle Island. There are several volcanic cones, the most conspicuous of which is Mount Egmont in New Plymouth, 8,850 feet high, and close to the sea. There are occasional earthquakes, and the town of Wellington has particularly suffered from these visitations. A high mountain chain runs through the Middle Island, culminating in Mount Cook, which attains the height of 13,200 ft. Mount Kaikora, in Nelson Province, also, is 9,300 feet. There are many good harbours, but they lie chiefly on the W. side of the islands. There are many lakes and numberless small rivers in the two larger islands. The aborigines have settled down into farming and trading colonies, and share the political franchise of the self-governed colony. The country was first formally taken possession of as a British colony in 1840. In 1837 the New Zealand Company was formed in England, and in 1851 made over its affairs to the Government for a money consideration of 265,370*l.* The territory was discovered in 1642 by Tasman, who examined the western coast, and by Cook on the east side in 1769. In 1853 a free constitution was proclaimed, and is now in force.

NEXÖN, a town of Denmark, stift Zealand, on E. coast of Bornholm island. Pop. 1,400.

NIHA-TRING or YATRANG, a seaport town of Anam, cap. prov., with a good harbour at a river's mouth, in lat. 13° 19' N., lon. 106° 20' E.

NIAGARA, a river of North America, between Upper Canada and the U. S. (New York state), unites Lakes Erie and Ontario, the river having a N. course of 35 m. from the former to the latter, and a total descent in that distance of 334 feet. It encloses numerous islands, the largest, Goat Island, having an area of 17,000 acres, and 15 m. from Lake Erie it forms the famous FALLS OF NIAGARA, where the river is precipitated over a vast ledge of silurian limestone, forming two cataracts, separated by Goat Island, 500 feet in width. The Horse-shoe fall, on the Canadian side, is 1,800 feet across, and 158 feet in perpendicular depth, and the American Falls 600 feet in breadth, 163 feet in depth, and above which a strong rude bridge crosses to Goat Island. The banks rise to 180 feet in perpendicular elevation, and are sprinkled with hotels and villas, and on both sides of the Falls, for some distance below, the stream forms a rapid, enclosed within a bed only 160 yards across. It has been estimated that the Falls discharge 100,000,000 tons of water per hour. A cable suspension bridge 800 feet span, and at an elevation of 230 feet, has been erected on the river, a little above the commencement of the cataract.

NIAGARA (formerly Newark), a town, Upper Canada, British North America, cap. dist., on the W. side of the Niagara river, at its mouth in Lake Ontario. It has a brisk traffic by steam with New York, Toronto, and Kingston. Races are annually held in its vicinity.

NIAGARA, a township on the E. side of the river, U. S., North America, New York, containing Goat Island, and a portion of the Falls. Pop. 1,351.—Niagara Falls is a contiguous vill., with churches, hotels, and manufs. of woollen cloth, steam engines, and paper, with corn and saw mills. Pop. 1,000. The Buffalo and Lockport Railways meet here.

NICARAGUA (STATE OF), a state of the Central American Confederation, mostly between lat. 10° 45' and 16° N., lon. 83° 15' and 87° 30' W., having N. Honduras, W. the Pacific, S. Costa Rica, and E. Caribbean Sea, and elsewhere the Pacific Ocean. Area 49,500. Pop. (1855) 300,000. It comprises one of the largest plains in the Confederation, with the lake, whence it is named; also, the volcanic mountains Guanacaure, Vieja, and Masaya. The river San Juan is partly in this state. Soil mostly of high fertility; the cotton raised is stated to be superior to that of Brazil, though little exported, except to the adjacent state of Costa Rica. Sugar of the best quality, and ludigo, are principal products. In 1855 the exports amounted in value to 740,000 dollars, consisting of bullion to 600,000 dollars; with indigo, sarsaparilla, cotton, sugar, cattle, and mahogany. More recently, about 500 or 600 tons of Brazil wood, and 30,000 hides annually, with some indigo, were the principal exports. Imports of British and North American manufactures are estimated in value at 100,000 dollars annually, the British imports forming two-thirds of the whole. Silks, gloves, and wines, are received from France, linens and glass wares from Germany; the other imports are chiefly from Peru, Chile, etc. Chief cities, Leon the cap., Masaya, Greytown or San Juan de Nicaragua, Bluefields, Nioaragua, Granada, and Managua. [Mosquito]. Chief port, Realajo. The State has been subject to perpetual revolutions. Nicaragua, a town in the above state, on the W. shore of Lake Nicaragua, 38 m. S.E. Granada. Pop. upwards of 8,000, but the commerce of the lake is mostly absorbed by Granada.

San Juan de Nicaragua is a seaport town on the Caribbean Sea. Mosquito. Nicaragua placed itself under the protection of the United States by treaty in 1857, San when Juan del Norte and San Juan del Sur were declared free ports.

NICARAGUA LAKE, Central America, lies mostly between lat. 11° and 12° 12' N., lon. 84° and 86° W., about 12 m. from the Pacific Ocean, and 90 from the Caribbean Sea, into which latter it discharges its surplus waters by the river San Juan. Length N.W. to S.E., 140 m.; average breadth 40 m. It is adapted for ships of the largest burden, being 15 fathoms in depth, and it contains the islands Omotape, Zapetero, Solentiname, and some others. Its surface is 128 feet above the level of the Pacific; but the surrounding country is only undulating, nowhere rising to more than 487 feet in additional elevation, and the San Juan is generally navigable; from which, and other reasons, it has been proposed to establish through it a communication between the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans, and which would obviate the dangerous passage for shipping around Cape Horn. At its W. end this lake is connected by a small river with the Lake of Leon or Managua, from which also the cutting a canal, or a railway, to the Pacific, has been contemplated. [PANAMA.]

NIGARIA, Icaria, an island of the Grecian Archipelago, belonging to Turkey, 12 m. W. Samos. Lat. 37° 38' N., lon. 26° 10' E. Area 50 sq. m. Pop. 1,000. Surface mountainous. They constitute, with the Andamans, the extension of the great volcanic band of Sumatra and Java. In the S. group, Great Nicobar has an area of 1,268 sq. m., and Little Nicobar 86 sq. m. Aggregate pop. about 1,000 Malays. Piracy is carried on here, the crews of several English vessels having been murdered, the ships pillaged and afterwards sunk. Cannoria, Chowry, and the other islands of the north group, are smaller. They are all covered with trees and very fertile, yielding in abundance coconuts, oranges, sugar, tobacco, and bamboos. Animals comprise scorpions, crocodiles, serpents, rats, pigs, dogs, and cats. Mean annual temperature 70° Fahr. The islands are exposed to frequent hurricanes; the rainy season lasts 9 months, and the unusual phenomenon of frequent rain in the dry season (December to February), renders them most unhealthy. Repeated attempts at colonization have failed, on account of the prevalence of yellow fever. [ANDAMAN—DEMLARK.]

It is watered by the Loire, and its affl. the Allier, which separates it from the depts. Cher and Allier. The Yonne rises in the dep., and the canal of Nivernais connects it with the Loire. Minerals comprise iron, coal, and marble. It has several mineral springs. A third part of its surface is covered with wood, which partly supplies Paris with fuel. Corn is raised sufficient for consumption, the wine is of good quality. Fruits and hemp are cultivated. Cattle and sheep are extensively reared. Chief industry in iron and steel works. Linen, porcelain, and jewellery are manufactured. The dep. is divided into the arronds. Château-Chinon, Clamecy, Cosne, and Nevers, its principal towns.

NIGRA, Cadya, a town of Asia Minor, paah. Karamania, cap. sanj., on a height, 47 m. N.E. Eregh. Pop. 5,000. It is the residence of a paasha, and has 8 fortresses and a Turkish college. The plain of Nigdel extends S.W. from it for about 50 miles.

NIGRA, a celebrated river of Western Africa, considered identical with the Joliba or Quorra, one branch of which rises in the Kong Mountains, near lat. 9° 25' N., lon. 9° 45' W., 1,600 feet above the level of the sea, but the true source of the Niger is probably the recently discovered snowy mountains under the equator; the river flows S. through Soudan and Guinea to the Bight of Benin (Gulf of Guinea), which it enters by a delta, between lat. 4° and 6° N., lon. 5° and 7° E. Nearly the entire course of the W. tributary has been traced by Park and Lander, and 100 m. from its supposed source it has been found navigable for large canoes; in its lower part, the river is in some places impeded by shoals, though varying from 1 to 5 m. in width, and often deep enough for moderate-sized vessels. Principal mouths, the New Calabar, Bonny, Nun, Forcados, and Benue rivers. Chief tributaries, the Sackatoo and Chadda rivers. The scenery near the delta of the Niger is of the wildest forest character. The only entrance yet discovered is narrow and very difficult. All attempts to ascend the river have failed, chiefly from the extreme insalubrity of the climate. The last expedition, under Captain Allen, in 1841, consisted of 8 steamers, fitted out by the British Government at an expense of 65,000*l*.

NIGRA, two maritime pas. of Scotland.—I. co. Kincardine, opposite Aberdeen. Area 3,376 ac. Pop. 1,641.—II. co. Ross and Cromarty, occupying a peninsula between the Firths of Moray and Cromarty, 21 m. (1846) 1,178,200. Surface mostly level, soil fertile. Principal rivers, the Volga, with its affluents, the Oka, Betlougá, and Piana. Forests are extensive, the products of corn exceeds the consumption, hemp and flax are cultivated in large quantities, and many cattle and horses are reared. It has manufs. of coarse linens and canvass, iron works, distilleries, tanneries, soap and glass works. Principal exports are corn and flour, cattle, horses, leather, tallow, linen, canvass, cordage, iron, timber, potash, and glass. The gov. is subdivided into 11 circles. Principal towns, Nishnui-Notgorod, Balachna, and Arsamias.

NIZHNI (or NIZHNI) NOVGOROD, NIVGOGROD or NIZNI, a town of Russia, cap. gov. same name, near the angle formed by the conf. of the Oka with the Volga, 205 m. E.N.E. Moscow. Lat. 56° 19' 43" N., lon. 44° 0' 58" E. Stationary pop. (1855) 25,384, but at the time of its great fair from 200,000 to 300,000 persons are here collected from all parts of Europe and Asia. It consists of an upper and a lower town, the former or citadel, on a height S. the Volga, has two cathedrals, churches, government offices, convents, schools, and an obelisk 76 feet in height. The lower town, on flat ground along the Volga, is chiefly built of wood, and communicates by a bridge of boats across the Oka, where are vast iron and stone built bazaars, divided into sections for separate goods, and surrounded by the rivers and a canal. Here is held the largest fair in the world for eight weeks, from the 1st of July annually (removed to N. Novgorod from Macariev on the Volga in 1817), and at which goods sold annually are estimated to amount in value to 160,587,000 rubles. Of this amount Russian home produce stood for 122,557,000 rubles, manufactured goods from the rest of Europe and colonial produce, 15,635,000 do., and Asiatic produce 22,005,000 do. Nizni-Novgorod has ecclesiastical and military academies, and manufs. of linens and leather. NILE, Nilus, a great river of Eastern Africa, formed by the union of the Bahr-el-Abiad (White or True Nile) and the Bahr-el-Azrek (Blue river). The first is supposed to rise in the recently discovered snowy mountains under the equator, between lon. 32° and 38° E. Expeditions sent by the Pacha of Egypt in 1840-2, traced it to lat. 4° 43' N., lon. 80° 58' E.; Werne ascended it to lat. 4° 30' N., lon. 34° E., and M. Brun-Rollet in 1854, still nearer to the equator; but its true source has baffled explorers of all ages. From this point it flows generally N., with a width of from 1 m. to 2 m., and joins the Bahr-el-Azrek at Khartum in Nubia (lat. 15° 57' N.). The second rises in Abyssinia, in lat. 10° 58' 25" N., lon. 35° 53' 39" E. It flows N. 65 m., when it enters Lake Dembeah on the S.W.; emerging from the lake on the S.E., it flows in the form of a curve, first S., then W. and N.W., traversing in its course several mountain chains, and descending by numerous falls into the plains of Nubia, where it passes Sennar. Its confluence with the Bahr-el-Abiad forms the Nile, which from this point flows N.E., N., and N.W., past Halfay, Shendi, and Berber, to lat. 19° 20', where it turns to the S.W., forming a wide curve called the "great bend." In lat. 18° it again turns N. ward, and continues in a northerly direction past Dongola, Girgeh, Siout, and Cairo, to its mouth. Near Es-souan, and from the junction of its head streams to its delta, its basin is formed by two parallel chains of mountains, which in some places close upon it and form rapids, and in others open up and leave fine plains between them and the river. It forms the first cataract (in ascending) near Es-souan, lat. 24° 10' N., the second being in lat. 21° 52' 20" N., and the third in lat. 19° 40' N. Its banks are generally elevated in Nubia; they are less so in Middle Egypt, and absolutely flat in the delta. From Es-souan to the sea, the average fall is 2 inches to a mile, and its mean velocity is about 3 m. an hour. Its length from supposed source, following its bends to the sea, is about 3,000 m. (direct distance 2,300 m.) The delta of the Nile commences at lat. 30° 7' N., where its waters spread out into numerous streams in the form of a triangle, extending at its base on the Mediterranean over a space of 120 m.; the two principal mouths are the W. or Rosetta branch, and the E. or Damietta branch. The others are the Bourlos and Dibe mouths. The system of the Nile is an anomaly among rivers: in ascending its course no affluent is met with for 1,400 m., the first being the Atbara in Nubia, which joins it on the right, 27 m. S. Berber. It is the only great tropical river, which by its pe-medical inundations fertilizes a country surrounded throughout a great part of its course by sandy deserts. The waters began to rise in June, and they subsided in September [Egyr]. From time immemorial the Egyptians have made use of canals for the purpose of extending the inundations. The rise of the Nile appears due to the periodical rains which fall in the tropical regions of Africa from June to September. In Upper Egypt the swelling of the river amounts to about 30 feet, and at Cairo to 24 feet, perpendicular.

NORTH SEA or GERMAN OCEAN (German Die Meer, Dutch Noord Zee, and Germanicum Mare), is that part of the Atlantic Ocean, bounded E by Norway and Denmark, S by Hanover, the Netherlands, Belgium, and France, and W by the British islands. By the Danes it is called the "West Sea," in reference to their position. On the N E it forms a wide arm called the Skagerack, 60 m broad, which separates Norway from Denmark. This again communicates Sward with the Cattegat or Altageat, a great arm of the North Sea, between Sweden on the E, the Danish isls on the S, and the peninsula of Jutland on the W. It is narrowest at its N end, and widest at the S. It communicates with the Baltic by the 3 straits called the Sound or Öre sund, and the Great and Little Belts, and by the Gotha Canal in Sweden which avoids these straits. The principal rivers which flow into the North Sea are the Thames, Schelde, Rhine, Rhine, Weser, Elbe, Roder, and Glommen, chief ports London, Yarmouth, Hull, Leith, Dundee, Dunkirk, Ostend, Flushing, Bergen-op Zoom, Rotterdam, Amsterdam, Harlingen, Altona, and Hamburg. The navigation of a portion of it is impeded by sand banks. It affords a valuable supply of fish. [ATLANTIC-BALTIC]

Pop 303,568 Surface in the W occupied by the Cheviot mountains and by wild moorlands, spurs of which stretch E ward through the co, but are separated by valleys, which on the E coast expand into broad level tracts. Coast line in parts very bold and rugged, in other parts indented by noble estuaries. Chief rivers, the Tyne, Coquet, Alne, Blyth, and Till. Climate variable, mountainous parts chilly and wet. Soil among the Cheviots a gravelly loam, producing the finest short pasture, among the other mountains a black peat, often swampy, and in the centre and E moist loams or clay. Agriculture well conducted. Wheat, oats, beans, barley, and turnips all yield the finest crops. Cattle, mostly short-horned, are bred and fed with acknowledged skill. The native Cheviot sheep possesses a deserved celebrity. The principal mineral is coal, for the export of which this co is pre-eminently noted. The pitmen are a well-paid, and greatly improved class. Lead and iron are also wrought. Manufs chiefly confined to Newcastle. The Newcastle and Carlisle, Great North of England, Newcastle and Berwick, and Caledonian Railways, traverse this county, and many small railways connect the coal pits with the rivers. Northumberland is divided into 6 wards, and 97 parishes in the diocese of Durham, and N circuit. Principal towns, Newcastle, Tyne-mouth, North Shields, Alnwick, Hexham, and Morpeth. Norway is composed of a series of elevated and barren table lands, called Fjelds or Fjelds, which extend along the W shores from the North Cape on the N, to the Nahe on the S, with an average breadth of about 80 m, to the parallel of Trondhjem, and thence expanding on the S to about 200 m in breadth. The mountains of Norway do not form a continuous chain or ridge, as usually represented, but, especially in the S, a series of broad plateaux, separated occasionally by deep and narrow valleys. The most characteristic of these table lands is the Dovre field, 3 000 feet in elevation, on which rises the mountain of Snechtatten, 7,820 feet above the sea. The culminating point of the southern or broadest portion is 8,500 feet above the sea, in lat 61° 30' N. In the N or narrower portion the Kiølen mountains assume more the form of a ridge, the highest point is Snihelma, 6,200 feet above the sea, in lat 67° 30' N. The W and N parts of the peninsula descend abruptly towards the W, while, on the other side, the mountains slope gently to the S. E. Skagerrakstinden, on the limits of the Sogne and Guldbrandsdal, is 8,670 feet, Lodal Kaiben, in the Sogne field, 6,673 feet, Gausta field, in Tollemarken, 6,182 feet, Folgefonden glacier, on the border of the stift Bergen, 6,200 feet. Scarcely one half the surface is under 2 050 feet absolute height and it is calculated that the proportion of arable land to the whole extent is not more than 1 to 10. The only plains are those formed by the table lands between the stifts Aggershus and Bergen, which extend from 60 to 80 m in length, and have an elevation of 9 000 to 4,620 feet. The mountains contain rich minerals, but, from the difficulty of transport and the want of fuel, mining industry is but little developed. The only mines in operation are those of silver, copper, iron, cobalt, and chrome. The chief product is iron, the mines of which are situated mostly in the Gulf of Christiansia. The silver mine of Kongsberg is at present one of the richest in Europe, and next to the copper mine of Kongsberg the most important in the kingdom. The principal valleys are confined to the F side of the peninsula, the longest is the Osterdal, watered by the Glommen, which, with its continuation the Solo and Ouddal, is 215 m in length. The next in extent, and the most fertile, is the Guldbrandsdal watered by the Tan-gen. Narrow belts between the coasts and the commencement of the plateaux, are the only low lands in Norway, the most extensive of these surrounds the Gulf of Trondhjem. The W shores are penetrated by an immense number of gulfs or fjords, which occasionally extend deep into the table lands. The chief of these are—from S to N, the Bukkefjord, Hardanger Trondhjem, Sultens, Ofodden, Forsang, and Vaaag firds. The most extensive gulf on the S coast is that of Christiansia. Numerous peninsulas separate the fjords, among the most remarkable of which are Cape Nord-Kya on the N, and Cape Stadt on the W coast. Some of the fjords form excellent harbours, but the immense number of mountainous islands and rocky islets which border the coast render access difficult. The largest of these archipelagoes are the Lofoden isls, separated from the continent by the Vest fjord, and further N the isls of Mageeroe, Soroe, Rmg valsoe, Hvaloe, and Beigen. Between these island groups and the continent there is a wide passage for coasting vessels. A great part of the E side of Norway is covered with lakes, said to number 30 000 in all, which, however, are generally of small extent. Many of them are situated at great elevations in the table land, among these the Higdisee, 15 to 20 m long, is 3,400 feet above the sea. The lakes abound in fish. The river systems of Norway are of the utmost importance in the economy of the country, the smaller streams are employed in driving the machinery of mines, corn and saw mills, and in floating timber to the larger rivers, these serve also as the chief means of communication in winter, when they are covered with strong ice. The largest rivers are on the E slope of the plateau, flowing S to the Skagerrack these are the Glommen, Lougen, Fæmund, Laaven, Bema, the Namsen, and Tana. Ships enter the mouths of some of these rivers for 5 or 10 m, but none of them are navigable on account of numerous waterfalls (for), which all of them form. Of these the more celebrated are the Surpensas on the Glommen, near Fredrikstad, and the Hukausof, in the dist Telemarken, which falls 613 feet perpendicular. Voringsof, in the dist Hardanger, has a perpendicular fall of 870 to 930 feet.

Strindmavr, from its vicinity to the sea, has a remarkably mild climate, considering its northern position. The snow line is much higher than in corresponding latitudes in other countries, in lat 61° it is 5,300 feet and in lat 70° 4,480 feet above the sea. In Siberia the cultivation of grain ceases at lat 60°, while in Norway it extends to lat 70° N. The mean annual temperature at the level of the sea is, at North Cape, 32°, Trondhjem (lat 63° 30') 40°, Lillensvang in Hudanger fjord (lat 60° 45'), Christiansia (lat 59° 54') 41°, Fahl. The sea never freezes, even at North Cape but the shallow water of the Skagerrack is occasionally frozen in winter, about 1 8-th part of the surface is covered with perpetual snow, and vast glaciers descend from the table lands. The year is nearly divided between winter and summer. Spring is almost unknown, and the autumn is cold and rigorous, snow covers the ground from the beginning of November till the end of March. In January and February the temperature is usually from 14° to 18°, and often as low as 2 Fahr. Summer lasts from May to September, during which the temperature is often as high as 108° Fahr. In the month of March the surface is strewed with ashes, earth, or sand, by which means the snow is melted, and from this process, combined with the great heat and the length of the day 8 to 12 weeks are sometimes sufficient for sowing, ripening, and reaping the crops in the interior. The climate of the W coast, though milder than that of the S or the interior, is deteriorated by excessive humidity, the W wind, blowing over the Atlantic, carries moisture, which is intercepted by the mountains, and precipitated in the form of rain, to the amount of 70 or 80 inches annually, while the E wind brings extreme drought. The vegetation of Norway varies according to climate and position. Among trees the pine tribe is the most numerous. The fir, which is found in lat. 60° 20', at an elevation of 4,000 feet, and the pine (pinus sylvestris) form vast and valuable forests in Aggershus, Christiansand, and Trondhjem. The forests of fir extend N to the Polar circle, and those of pine beyond it. The oak forms fine forests in the amt Jarlsberg and Laurvig, and especially in Christiansand. The birch attains the highest northern latitude in lat 70° it grows at an elevation of 1,680 feet above the sea. Fruit trees are not indigenous in Norway, although the wild apple is common in the lower regions, and the cherry is widely distributed

Flowers are successfully cultivated in the gardens of the S. and W. The principal grain of Norway is barley; the other cerealia are cultivated only in favoured spots in the S. Barley attains the highest northern latitude, and the greatest elevation: in lat. 58° 24' it is grown at a height of 3,538 feet; the extreme limit of its culture is lat. 70°; but there it only ripens at an elevation of 55 to 100 feet; its profitable culture is confined to a narrow belt of coast land, and to the agricultural colonies of Mølselv and Barodal, in Nordland. The corn raised is insufficient for home consumption. The potato has of late been extensively cultivated. The rearing of cattle is the chief occupation of the population of the mountainous districts, who, like the Swiss, leave the villas, and spend the summer with their flocks and herds in the upper valleys. From the simple habits of the population, and the excellent climate, the value of life is understood to be high in Norway, except at Bergen, which is unhealthy, and where leprosy is prevalent. The horses, a small but hardy breed, are extensively exported to Sweden, England, and Scotland. Sheep are of an inferior breed, and yield coarse wool. In the N. the reindeer is the only resource of the Laplander. The most destructive wild animals are the brown bear, wolf, and lynx; these, with the fox and others, are hunted for their skins. The eagle is so destructive to sheep and lambs, that a private company is established for its extirpation. Game of all kinds is abundant, and there are no game-laws. The chief objects of the chase are the deer, elk, reindeer, and hare; the seal, which abounds on all the coasts, the fish-otter; and, among birds, the grouse, and the capercaillie. The coast literally swarms with sea fowl: the wild goose and elder duck are numerous; the swan appears on the S. coast in winter, and ducks of various kinds abound on the coasts, and in the lakes and rivers. In the small uninhabited isles off the N. coast, vast numbers of the eggs of sea fowl are procured. Fishing forms the most important branch of industry. Whales are occasionally taken on the coast of Finnmark; salmon abound in the gulfs and rivers; there are extensive beds of oysters on all the shores, and the pearl oyster is found in many of the rivers.

There are few manufactures in Norway. Brandy distilleries and saw-mills are the only extensive branches of industry; next to these are forges and metal foundries, the produce of which is exported in a raw state, except what is used in the manufacture of arms at Kongsberg, and in the manufacture of iron wire and nails. The manufacture of cloth, linen, and cotton, as well as the preparation of skins and leather, are almost entirely domestic. The other manufactures comprise those of glass, paper, oil, gunpowder, soap, tobacco, and sugar refining. Owing to the difficulty of transport, all the seats of industry, and the only towns, are on the coast, and chiefly on the Gulf of Christiania. Ship-building is actively carried on in the ports. In the middle ages, the commerce of Norway consisted exclusively in the exportation of fish, and this is still the most important article of trade. Next to this is the export of timber, which was commenced by the Dutch in the 16th century; and, lastly, the products of the mines and metal forges. The principal forests are in the interior; the timber is felled in autumn and winter, and is conveyed over the snow to the coast. Fish is exported from all the towns on the W. coast, but Bergen is the chief entrepôt. The most important branches of this trade are dried fish and salted herrings. The principal mineral exports are iron, copper, and silver. The chief imports are salt, grain, and colonial produce. Commerce in the interior of the country is greatly impeded for want of means of communication; none of the rivers are navigable except near their mouths. There are good roads between the towns of the S. coast, and a railway is (1856) in progress from Christiania to Lake Mjøsen; but the usual communication is by sea. Among the numerous islands on the W. coast, there are violent and irregular currents, which render the coast navigation dangerous. Among these is the celebrated Malström or Moakenes Ström, the danger from which has, however, been greatly exaggerated. Regular communications have successively been established between the principal towns of the coast, from Christiania to Hammerfest, and steam vessels ply in the Gulf of Christiania, and on the Lakes of Mjøsen and Tyrifjord. Norway has a national discount bank and a mint.

Nearly the whole pop. of the kingdom are Northmen or Normans, with about 13,000 Fins or Lapps, who are of the Mongolian race. The chief occupation is agriculture and cattle-rearing. Silver, copper, and iron mining are carried on in 23 mining establishments. The Fins and Lapps live on the products of their reindeer; and the inhabitants of the coast on fishing. The Norwegian or Norsk, is one of the Teutonic or German languages, and is nearly allied to the Swedish and Danish. The constitution of Eldvold, modified by the Storting or National Assembly, is the fundamental law of the kingdom: its principal conditions are—that Norway is a free, independent, and indivisible state, only united under the same sovereign with Sweden. The freedom of the press is guaranteed. Lutheranism is the state religion, in which Lutherans are obliged to train their children. Other religions are tolerated, except Jews, Jesuits, and monks, who are excluded. The government is a constitutional monarchy. The kingdom is divided into five stifts, each of which has a bishop, and 340 parishes, to each of which a preacher is appointed. For administrative purposes it is divided into 19 ams. There are few countries in Europe where elementary instruction is more widely spread than in Norway; every peasant can read, and many can write and cast accounts. The law forbids the marriage of any one who cannot procure a certificate of confirmation, and this is only given to those who can read. Every individual of the age of 20 not confirmed is liable to be sent to a house of correction to receive the necessary instruction. In all the towns there are elementary schools, and many have Sabbath and private schools. Most of the towns have superior burgher schools. The chief seat of learning is the University of Christiania; there is a military school at Christiania, and a school of marine at Frederikshavn. Six normal schools are supported by the state. There are excellent public libraries, museums, and scientific collections, in the different towns. The principal literary productions are periodicals. Each commune is bound to support its own poor, and mendicity is punished as a crime. The state maintains magazines of reserve for grain, which is supplied to the inhabitants on payment of a fixed amount of interest.

In 1380, Olaf IV., King of Denmark, and heir to the throne of Norway, united the crowns of the two kingdoms, and this union lasted till 1814, when Norway was ceded by the King of Denmark, and annexed to Sweden by the Allied Powers, at the treaty of Kiel, and the two crowns of Norway and Sweden were declared united on the 4th November 1814.

NORWESIAN, a town of the U. S., North America, co. Pennsylvania. Pop. 10,002.

NORWICH, a city, parl. bor., and river-port, of England, cap. co. Norfolk, and a co. of itself, on the Yare or Wensum, here crossed by 10 bridges, 18 m. W. Yarmouth. Area of city and co. 5,926 ac. P. 68,185. The city, about 5 m. in circumference, is bordered on the N. and E. by the river; elsewhere it was formerly enclosed by walls, flanked with towers, and entered by 12 gates, but these have been mostly removed. On the S. and W. several new quarters have sprung up, and most of the hamlets of its co., now form suburbs continuous with the city. Near the centre of the city is the castle, a massive quadrangular Norman keep, now used for a prison. On the castle-hill are the new co. gaol, and the co. hall. The cathedral, built between the 11th and 16th centuries, is 411 feet in length, 191 feet in breadth, and surmounted by a spire 315 feet in height. Around it are the cloisters, bishop's palace, deanery, and St Ethelred and Erpingham gates, connecting the cathedral with the city. St Peter Mancroft is spacious; St George, Colegate, St Lawrence, and St Saviour. There are, besides, the Unitarian, Independent, Baptist, Roman Catholic, Friends' meeting-house, a Jews' synagogue, and other dissenting places of worship. St Andrew's Hall, used for corporation and other festivities, and public meetings, was originally a part of a Dominican convent. The Guild-hall, containing a collection of portraits; the city gaol, the corn exchange, public library, theatre, cavalry barracks, and a workhouse, are among the chief edifices. The great hospital charity, rev. 13,323*l.* a year, supports many aged persons; and a grammar school. The boys' and girls' hospital, rev. 4,000*l.*; Doughty's hospital, Norfolk and Norwich general hospital, blind asylum, Norfolk and Norwich literary institution, art-union, and a mechanics' institute, are among the most conspicuous public foundations. Norwich was long famous for its worsted manufacture, but this has declined in favour of the West Riding of Yorkshire; and most of the yarns now wrought up at Norwich, are spun at Bradford, etc. Its principal manufactures are now bandanas, bombazines, shawls, gauzes, crapes, silk fabrics of various kinds, mohair, fringes, sacking, and horse-hair, fabrics; besides silk, worsted, and woollen mills, and one cotton mill. Norwich has also iron and brass foundries; saff, oil, mustard, and corn, mills; breweries and dyeing works. It has a branch of the Bank of England, and several private banks. It communicates by a canal with the Lowestoff navigation; and with Ely, Cambridge and London, by the N. and E. Counties Railway. Corp. rev. 14,928*l.* It returns two members to House of Commons. Reg. electors (1848) 4,220. It is the place of election for the East division of Norfolk. Throughout the civil war it was garrisoned for the Parliament. Archbishop Parker, Dr Kay, Dr Samuel Clarke, and Beloe, the translator of Herodotus, were born at Norwich. The city is the seat of a triennial musical festival.

NOVA SCOTIA, a peninsula of North America, forming a British colonial territory, between lat. 43° 35' and 45° 40' N., lon. 60° 30' and 60° 10' W., connected N.W. with New Brunswick by an isthmus 14 m. across, and separated on the N. from Prince Edward island by Northumberland inlet, and by a narrow strait from Cape Breton on the N.E., having on other sides the Atlantic and the Bay of Fundy. Estimated area 17,246 sq. m. Pop. (1851) 276,177. Surface greatly diversified, and well watered, but nowhere more than 700 feet above the sea. Coal abounds in its W. part. Rivers numerous, and Lake Rossignol in the S. is 30 m. in length. Shores irregular, abrupt, and present numerous harbours, with deep water close to hand. In 1751, there were in the province 799,310 acres of improved land, besides 40,012 acres of dyked land chiefly on the upper part of Fundy Bay, soil very fertile. Principal crops are wheat, barley, rye, oats, potatoes, turnips, and maple sugar. Live stock comprise sheep, 282,180; cattle 243,713, of which 86,836 were milch cows; 28,760 horses; and 51,533 swine. In the same year there were 81 weaving and carding shops, 11,096 hand-looms, 10 steam factories, 1,153 saw mills, 398 grist mills, 9 foundries, 237 tanneries, 17 breweries and distilleries, and 131 miscellaneous factories. The number of vessels engaged in fisheries 812, aggregate 43,393 tons, employing 3,681 men; boats 5,161, employing 6,713 men. Number of vessels arrived at the port in 1851, 3,226, tonnage 382,102, value of cargoes 5,527,640 dollars. Cleared out 3,265 vessels, tonnage 311,080, value of cargoes 3,542,310 dollars. Exports consist of coal, fish, gypsum, bark, hides, wood and freestone; and the imports of pork, beef, corn, tobacco, cotton manufactures, and wheat. Number of vessels owned and registered in the province 2,791, tonnage 168,792. In 1850, 114,463 chaldrons of coal was mined, 28,603 casks of lime burned, 2,848,400 bricks made, 79,795 tons of gypsum quarried, 400 tons iron smelted (value 4,685*l*). In 1851, there were 567 churches, and 1,066 schools, attended by 31,374 pupils. Has railway communication with Halifax and other places. The province is vested in a lieutenant-governor, a council of 12 members, and a legislative assembly, elected by 40*l*. freeholders, 2 members being returned by each of the 10 counties, and the rest by the towns, the principal of which are Halifax, the cap., and chief seat of commerce, Annapolis, Liverpool, Pictou, and Windsor. The colony has a high court of chancery, and forms, with Cape Breton, a bishop's see. Public rev. (1844) 100,630*l*. Nova Scotia was discovered by Cabot in 1497, subsequently settled by the French, who named it Acadia, and after many vicissitudes, finally ceded to the British in 1759.

NOVA ZEMBLA (properly Novaya Zemlia, "New

Land"), an insular region, in the Arctic Ocean, considered to be comprised in Europe, and dependent on the Russian gov. Arkangel, between lat. 70° 30' and 76° 30' N., lon. 52° and 68° E. Length estimated at 470 m., and average breadth at 56 m. It consists of two islands separated by the channel Matotshkin-shar. Surface on the W side rises generally to 2,000 feet, and in some places to from 3,200 to 4,000 feet above the sea, but the E. shores are comparatively low and barren. Black clay-slate and limestone are principal constituent rocks, as in the Ural chain, of which Nova Zembla may be considered an insular continuation. Its coasts are frequented by walrus hunters in summer, but nowhere permanently inhabited. Subterranean labyrinths of great antiquity have been discovered here.

NOVAWE, a Bohemian colony in Prussia, prov. Brandenburg, reg. and 2 m. E. Potsdam. Pop. 1,773, who manufacture hemp and cotton stuffs.

NOVELDA, a town of Spain, prov. and 13 m. W. Alicante. Pop. 8,095, partly engaged in distilling and in manufs. of lace and confectionary.

NUBIA, a country of E. Africa, on the Red Sea, between lat. 11° and 24° N., lon. 28° and 39° E.; bounded E. by the Red Sea, S. by Abyssinia, W. by Darfur and the Great Desert, and N. by Egypt. Area, with Kordofan, estimated at 300,000 (?) sq. m., and pop. at 400,000 (?) It is divided into Lower Nubia, extending from the frontier of Egypt to Dongola (lat. 18° N.); and Upper Nubia from Dongola to Abyssinia. Nubia is situated almost entirely in the valley of the Nile, which is here so narrow as to leave no space for cultivation on its banks, and the productive districts occur in the gorges between the mountains and on the islands. A desert of sand and rocks, with some small fertile oases, extends E. from Lower Nubia to the Red Sea. In Upper Nubia the country is more varied, the Nile here receives its aff. the Atbara or Tacazze, 165 m. below the junction of the white and blue rivers; between these rivers are situated the regions of Shendi, Halfay, and Sennaar, which contain vast fertile plains. The climate of Nubia is extremely hot and dry, but on the whole healthy; the plague is said never to have penetrated S. of the second cataract (lat. 22° N.). Besides the animals common to Egypt, Nubia has the gnaffe, and several species of antelopes and buds, which belong to the central plateau of Africa. Agriculture employs most of the pop. on the banks of the Nile and its tributaries, and artificial irrigation is resorted to as in Egypt. Chief products dhourra, barley, cotton, indigo, tobacco, senna, coffee, and dates. Cattle, sheep, and goats are reared by the Arabs of the neighbouring deserts. Manufs. are limited to objects for domestic use. An extensive transit trade is carried on with the interior of Africa and Egypt, in slaves, gold-dust, senna, and ostrich leathers. Snakin on the Red Sea is the only port. The Nubians belong to Arabian and Ethiopian races; the pastoral tribes on the banks of the Treazze and the Upper Nile, speak the Arabic language. Previous to the conquest of Nubia by Ibrahim Pasha in 1821, it was governed by a great number of independent chiefs; since then it has been under the dominion of Egypt.
